LONDON, JULY 4, 1846.

We have had an opportunity of looking at the Bill for shortening Conveyances, brought into the House of Lords during this session by Lord Brougham, and we shall, in a subsequent Number of THE JURIST, examine and criticise its merits more carefully. In the meantime, it will be sufficient to inform our readers who may not have seen it, that it proceeds upon the same plan as the acts passed during the last session for the same purpose; and we venture to predict for it, should it pass into law, the same quiet neglect at the hands of the Profession, to which its predecessors have been condemned.

It may be greatly questioned, whether it proceeds at all upon a sound principle; but, if it does, it is perfectly clear that it is wholly insufficient for the purposes of the conveyancer's business.

Firstly, with regard to the principle of this mode of shortening conveyances. It consists in drawing conveyances in a language composed of short symbols, explained by reference to elaborate forms. The symbols are to stand for the parliamentary forms; but they are not the forms, and cannot be construed without resorting to the forms themselves. Let us consider how this would work. A deed is laid before counsel to advise whether proceedings at law or in equity can be taken upon it. He must, of course, have the act of Parliament open before him, and at every fresh line of the deed, he will have to refer to some fresh page of the act, to compare the symbol with its exponent, and to consider the effect of the exponent. If separate clauses in the deed have to be compared together, much difficulty will arise from the inconvenience of not being able, as we now are with most deeds, to place the conflicting clauses before the eye at one and the same time; instead of which, a species of saltatory operation of the eye and mind will have to take place, from page a to page c, and thence to pages i or k, and then back again, and so on, to the great and very unnecessary fatigue of the person having to advise upon the deed. But this, it will be said, is merely an objection going to the question of the convenience of professional men.

Let us put another case, to consider the effect as to the diminution of expense to the client. Suppose an abstract of title to be in course of preparation. The solicitor cannot, as now, content himself with perusing the deed, and abstracting such parts as, from his experience, he knows are material. At every symbolical clause or covenant, he must turn to the act of Parliament, and consider the exponential clause, and determine whether it is requisite specifically to refer counsel to that particular clause, unless he elects to make his abstract consist of a complete copy of every deed, and to cast upon counsel the task of wading through the abstract, with one eye upon the papers, and the other darting backwards and forwards through the act of Parliament. Whether this process of abstracting deeds, which, we contend, will be inevitable, will be less expensive than preparing an abstract of deeds framed according to the present usual forms, will admit of doubt. But we have no doubt that it will be more expensive to the client, than would the present mode of preparing an abstract, if deeds were drawn according to such short forms as are gradually getting into use, and as would certainly become general under the effect of a few simple regulations. We shall not at present enter more into the details of this part of the subject, reserving them for the examination of Lord Brougham's bill, that we purpose presenting to our readers.

The second objection to this bill is, that, if its principle be correct, it falls wholly short of the wants of the conveyancer. The varieties of the clauses of deeds are almost endless; the variation of structure, and language rendered necessary in deeds of the same class, by the various circumstances of parties, are still more abundant. Even in mortgage transactions, the deeds relating to which are the most samely of all the conveyancer's productions, it is unusual for the draftsman not to find in every new case, some circumstances which render a greater or less departure from his forms requisite. But when we come to settlements and wills, and purchase-deeds relating to encumbered property, (and when does the conveyancer draw a purchase-deed of property wholly unencumbered?), it is not too much to say, that no two cases are ever totally alike, and scarcely ever are any two instruments framed with the same forms. Either the usual arrangement of the limitations and forms has to be varied, entailing some slight alteration in the wording of the instrument, or some intention wholly or partially unusual has to be expressed; so that, to supply the wants of the conveyancer, if he is to speak in short symbols, and rely on a parliamentary exponent, the greatest variety of forms must be collected in the parliamentary book of precedents; otherwise it will be of use to him only in those ordinary transactions which form but a small portion of the business of a conveyancer, and do not, in the usual course of business, form the portion found most expensive to the client.

Reviews.

The Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, &c.
By G. SPENCE, Esq., Q. C. Vol. 1.

[London, 1846: Stevens & Norton.

It has long been remarked by foreign jurists, that, of all the European lawyers, the English are, as a body, the most practical, but the least scientific; the most accurately informed of the existing state, and the most ill informed upon the antiquarian learning, of the law that they administer. The remark is perfectly founded in truth; but whether the truth is one which entails humiliation upon the English lawyer, is a question on which there may be opposite opinions, fortified by apparently cogent arguments.

We are not of those who think that to know anything besides practical law, is prejudicial to the efficiency of a practising lawyer; but, on the other hand, we remember, that, as the primary business of the people with the laws, is to obtain their protection, so the primary business of the lawyer, as his very name bespeaks, is to advise and assist the people in obtaining that protection; and for that purpose it is more material to know what the law actually is, than to know how it has become what it is. Nevertheless, there is a charm in seeking, through masses of bygone learning, to extract from the past the secret of the construction of that marvellous system, which, whatever may be said of it by its enemies, has ministered in this country, in no small degree, to the gradual consolidation of true liberty, by establishing and maintaining doctrines under which property has been placed under the two conditions most favourable to civilisation, viz. nearly total imperturbability as to its protection, and infinite perturbability as to its disposition.

The knowledge, too, of the various phases through which the law has passed in forming itself during a course of several centuries, difficult as it is of acquisition, and sparingly as it is applicable to modern practice, is yet not without its influence upon the style of thinking and speaking of even the modern practical lawyer; and cases will still occasionally arise, and those, cases of the most stirring and interesting character, in which, in determining on the rights of the Crown or of the subject, the advocate must dip deeply into the wells of ancient law, and seek his evidence among the words that were uttered and the things that were done, in the days when chancellors were priests, and subpoenas had sometimes to be served at the point of the lance. Great thanks, then, are due to the lawyers who explore, for the benefit of their brethren, the history of the law, sacrificing to the study of legal antiquarianism not only their rest, but that which is even dearer to Englishmen, the acquisition of wealth; not being like those who, in the words of Spelman, "are all for profit and lucrando pane, taking what they find at market, without inquiring whence it came;" but more like those beyond the seas, who are "not only diligent but very curious in this kind."

Mr. Spence has entitled himself to these thanks by the production of the volume now before us, in which we find, as the result of inquiries that must have been painfully laborious, a deeply interesting account of the origin and gradual growth of the Court of Chancery and of its equitable principles.

The early part of Mr. Spence's work is devoted to an investigation of the state of the laws in the Anglo-Saxon period of our history, and thence through its period of amalgamation with the system of Norman feudalism; and even so early as the time of Edgar is to be found, according to Mr. Spence, the germ of the jurisdiction of Chancery. "Besides the jurisdiction" (he says) "which was exercised by the king in his court, or by his counsils, he appears to have exercised a kind of equitable jurisdiction for mitigating the rigour of the positive law laid down in the codes, when its strict execution in the particular case would have operated injustice. Thus, it is declared by the code of Edgar, that if the law were too heavy, a mitigation might be sought from the king. The law of Edgar appears in terms to apply to the fines and compensations fixed by the law for personal injuries. The laws of the Burgundians notice this prerogative in more extensive terms; it was there declared that it belonged to the king to solve ambiguities, and to interfere when a case arose requiring a remedy, but as to which the written law was silent, and to apply the doctrines of equity to the decision of cases involving special considerations. In each nation the prerogative appears to have been of imperial origin.

"Edgar's successors, Anglo-Saxon, Norman, and English, continued to exercise this jurisdiction, which is the germ of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery."

In a considerable portion of this part of the book, Mr. Spence treats of the history of the common law, and of the law of property of this country,—a subject collateral to his principal one, the jurisdiction of courts of equity. In this part of his work he has scattered notes full of curious matter of antiquarian law, with a profusion perfectly overwhelming; and civilians, black letter, old charters and precedents, and both English and foreign writers on such matters, whose names even but few lawyers have heard, enrich Mr. Spence's pages with what would have been termed, in the language of the periods of which he writes, marvellous quaint and cunning learning. Of course, in a series of researches in the nature of antiquarianism, matter must be occasionally found, which is in itself utterly trivial, and only interesting because time has rendered the ascertainment of the truth difficult. Of this character is a grave note in p. 119, which exhibits in an amusing way, the importance that trifles acquire in the minds of very learned men, if they do but have reference to something infinitely old and obscure. "I am favoured," says our author, (p. 119, note (m)), "by that very in'telligent and accomplished scholar and antiquarian, Sir Henry Ellis, with the following authority, which establishes the fact of Bracton having been a justice; 'I had searched in vain for any authentic information on the subject.

"In the Chartulary of Waltham Abbey, (Harleian Manuscript, 371, fol. 71), there is a 'Final Concord' of the 30th Hen. III, made before the king at Westminster, in the close of which, among the greater persons present, there are particularly mentioned 'Henrico de Batonia, Jeremia de Caxton, et Henrico de Bracton, Justiciarii, et alii domini Regis fidelibus.' The instrument is an agreement between Peter de Savoy and Simon Abbott, of Waltham, respecting common of pasture at Cheshunt. This was a public authentic instrument. By some Bracton had been stated to be Chief Justice, (Baheus, cited Petyt Jus Parl., p. xiii); by others, a justice in Eyre, (Dr. Duck). A writer of great learning and intelligence in the Penny Cyclopædia, under the article BRACTON, to which I have been referred by Sir Henry Ellis, speaking of the writers to whom we are indebted for collecting what could be recovered of the English authors of the Middle Ages, says, 'Their statements that Bracton was a judge of the Common Pleas, and that he was Chief Justice of England, are now regarded as questionable. There is better reason to believe that he was a Henry de Bracton who delivered Law Lectures in the University of Oxford towards the middle of the thirteenth century, and that he sat, once at least, as a justice itinerant.'

"The 30th Hen. III, (A. D. 1246), says Sir H. Ellis, 'desides the exact time when Bracton may be said to have flourished.'

In the second part of the volume, Mr. Spence having cleared his way to it through the intricate history of the general law of this country, commences the main object of his work, the rise and establishment of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery; and referring frequently to Sir F. Palgrave, he shews very clearly that the equitable jurisdiction existed as a separate jurisdiction, long before it was exercised by the Chancellor.

"In the time of Edward IV," he says, (p. 334, n. (b)), 'when the Chancery was, as we shall see, completely established as a court of extraordinary jurisdiction, all the judges of England affirmed that the Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer are all the king's courts, and have been so time out of mind, so that no man knoweth which is most ancient. (8 Co. Praef. xvi). Lord C. J. Hobart also treats the Court of Chancery as a court of equity, and the courts of law equally as fundamental courts. In the eleventh year of James I, it was resolved by the Lord Chancellor, Chief Justice of England, Master of the Rolls, and two justices, that the king cannot grant a commission to determine any matter of equity, (i.e. to constitute a new tribunal); but it ought to be determined in the Court of Chancery, which hath jurisdiction in such case time out of mind, and had always such allowance in law. (Earl of Derby's case, 12 Rep. 114). But neither Glanville, who wrote in the reign of Henry II, Bracton in the time of Henry III, or Britton in the time of Edward I, and who expressly treats of courts, nor Fleta, nor Hengham, nor the book intitled 'Diversity of Courts,' mention the Court of Chancery as a court of equity. The only extraordinary jurisdiction referred to in these early writers is that which was exercised by the king himself, advised, no doubt, by his council, or the Chancellor, the chief member.'

And it is not till the reign of Edward II that the Court of Chancery appears to have acted as a distinct court of equity. (See p. 337).

Our space will not permit us to travel over the mass of matter discussed by Mr. Spence in the second part of his work: we will only say that it contains a most elaborate history of the jurisdiction of the court, tracing each branch of that jurisdiction from its origin, and in doing so, exhibiting a complete picture of the gradual formation of a system apparently complex, but really simple, of which it is not too much to say, that, with all its defects, which are mostly in the nature of defects of official detail, it is, perhaps, the most magnificent and practically useful monument that man has ever, in any country, raised in his character of a jurisprudential animal. We will close this notice of Mr. Spence's valuable labours by extracting a curious note touching impertinence in pleading, which shews the singular combination in the court, in the early periods of its existence, of the spirit of equity that animated it, with the rudest forms of procedure to enforce that spirit. "Very stringent measures," says Mr. Spence, "were taken to prevent impertinent matter from being introduced into answers and other subsequent pleadings, of which the orders at the foot will serve as sufficient illustrations."

And then, in a note, he gives the following curious statement:—"The following have been selected as calculated to give some notion of the despotic authority which was exercised by the court on the subject:—

'Between William Mylward, Plaintiff.

'William Weldon and others, Defendants.

'And between William Weldon, Plaintiff.

'And William Mylward, Defendant.

'8th February, 1596.

'And where Richard Mylward, the plaintiff's son, did confess that he himself did heretofore draw the long replications of six score sheets of paper, which heretofore was put into the court by the plaintiff to the answer of the defendants; in which replication much impertinent and idle matter was inserted, as it heretofore seemed to his Lordship, of purpose to put the defendants to extraordinary charges and that he used no advice of counsel therein: It is ordered by his Lordship, that the said Richard Mylward be forthwith committed to the prison of the Fleet for his misdeemeanor and abuse offered to this court." Reg. Lib. A. 1596, fol. 687.

'Same Cause, 10th February, 1596.

'Forasmuch as it now appeared to this court by a report made by the now Lord Keeper, being then Master of the Rolls, upon consideration had of the plaintiff's replication according to an order of the 7th of May, of anno 37 Regine, that the said replication doth amount to six score sheets of paper, and yet all the matter thereof which is pertinent might have been well contrived in sixteen sheets of paper, wherefore the plaintiff was appointed to be examined to find out who drew the same replication, and by whose advice it was done, to the end that the offender might, for example sake not only be punished, but also be fined to her Majesty for that offence; and that the defendant might have his charges sustained thereby. (The execution of which order was, by a later order made by the late Lord Keeper the 20th of June, anno 37 Regine, suspended without any express cause shewed thereof in that order, and was never since called upon until the matter came to be heard on Tuesday last, before the Lord Keeper, at which time some mention was again made of the same replication); and for that it now appeared to his Lordship, by the confession of Richard Mylward, alias Alexander, the plaintiff's son, that the said Richard himself did both draw, devise, and engrave the same replication, and because his Lordship is of opinion that such an abuse is not in any sort to be tolerated—proceeding of a malicious purpose to increase the defendant's charge, and being fraught with much impertinent matter not fit for the 'court: It is therefore ordered, that the Warden of the Fleet shall take the said Richard Mylward, alias Alexander, into his custody, and shall bring him into Westminster Hall on Saturday next, about 10 of the clock in the forenoon, and then and there shall cut a hole in the midst of the same engrossed replication which is delivered unto him for that purpose, and put the said Richard's head through the same hole, and so let the same replication hang about his shoulders with the written side outward, and then, the same so hanging, shall lead the said Richard bareheaded and barefaced round about Westminster Hall, whilst the courts are sitting, and shall shew him at the bar of every of the three courts within the Hall, and then shall take him back again to the Fleet, and keep him prisoner until he shall have paid 10*l.* to her Majesty for a fine, and 20 nobles to the defendant for his costs in respect of the aforesaid abuse, which fine and costs are now adjudged and imposed upon him by this court for the abuse aforesaid.' (Reg. Lib. A. 1596, fol. 672) Sir J. Puckering, Lord Keeper). This order is mentioned by Tothill, but his reference is, as usual, erroneous; Mr. Cecil Munro kindly searched for it for me and found it. Replications not being necessarily signed by counsel, were continually referred for slander. (V. int. et. A. 1594, fo. 459)."

LONDON, JULY 11, 1846.

SOME important cases have lately been decided upon the jurisdiction of equity, which we think we cannot deal with better, than by simply collecting and stating them to our readers. The first class of these cases has reference to the jurisdiction of the court to interfere, in matters apparently properly cognisable in bankruptcy. In Thompson v. Derham and Thompson v. Goodman, (1 Hans, 358), the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to interfere in the distribution of a bankrupt's estate directed by the Court of Bankruptcy, was defined. The material facts of the case were these: William Hinde, one of several partners, died in January, 1839, leaving large property in the partnership concern, and appointing some of his co-partners co-executors of his will with other persons not in the business. The executors allowed the whole of such property to remain in the business, contrary to the trusts of the will. In December, 1839, the surviving partners became bankrupt. In May, 1840, a bill was filed by the persons claiming under the will of William Hinde, for administering the trusts of such will, and the assignees of the bankrupts were made parties, and against them it prayed, that the plaintiff might have a lien upon the partnership property for what should be found due to the estate of William Hinde from the partnership; and, among other things, that the assignees might set apart, out of the assets, a sum to answer the debt due to William Hinde's estate, or that the plaintiffs might be authorised to enter a claim for the amount. Pending the suit, the commissioner acting under the fiat, was about to declare a dividend: the plaintiffs in the equity suit applied to the court for leave to enter a claim, and to have a fund set apart to answer it, both of which applications the commissioner refused. The plaintiffs then presented a petition to the Court of Review for the same purpose, praying in the alternative, that the commissioner might be ordered to stay any declaration of dividend till the hearing of the cause in equity. On this petition the Court of Review made no order, expressing, however, an opinion that the commissioner ought not to pay any dividends until the plaintiffs should have had an opportunity of making an application to the Court of Chancery. Thereupon, a supplemental bill was filed, and a motion made for an injunction to restrain the assignees from paying any dividends until the hearing of the cause, or further order.

The Vice-Chancellor, Sir James Wigram, appears to have inclined strongly to the opinion, that the court had no jurisdiction to interfere to prevent the creditors from taking advantage of the adjudication of a court of competent jurisdiction to distribute the bankrupt's estate, and refused the motion; and, on appeal, the Lord Chancellor also refused to interfere. The question of the jurisdiction of the court to interfere, where by interfering it may impeach the decision of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, was elaborately discussed by his Honor. The result of the whole judgment, which is as guarded as it is elaborate, seems to be the limited proposition, that the Court of Chancery ought not, either on the ground of its general jurisdiction over trusts or otherwise, to interfere by injunction to restrain a distribution of that which is admitted to be a bankrupt's property, when such distribution is made pursuant to the orders of the court to which the Legislature has expressly given jurisdiction to distribute bankrupts' estates. And it is not to be inferred that Thompson v. Derham decides anything upon the general question, whether the Court of Chancery has in no case jurisdiction to interfere in matters over which the Court of Bankruptcy may also have jurisdiction.

The next class of cases relates to the jurisdiction of equity to interfere by way of restraining proceedings at law; and under this head it has been decided, that the Interpleader Acts, (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45), apply only to cases where the opposite claims made, depend upon purely legal rights, and not to cases where one of the claims, although not sustainable at law, may have an equity to support it. In such cases an injunction will be granted to restrain the prosecution of proceedings at law under the Interpleader Act, even though those proceedings are taken under an order made by one of the common-law judges. This was decided in Langton v. Horton, where the defendant Bernie had assigned to the plaintiff a ship then on her voyage, and her prospective cargo. On the ship coming home, the plaintiff, by a messenger, took possession of her, and shortly afterwards the sheriff seized the ship and cargo under a writ sued out by the defendant Horton, a judgment creditor of Bernie. The sheriff having notice of the plaintiff's claim, summoned the opposing claimants to go before one of the judges, under the Interpleader Act. This was done, and the judge directed an issue. It did not appear that the judge was informed of the terms of the issue, or had his attention called to the circumstance of the demands of both claimants not being purely legal; and it was clear that the parties then both thought that their demands were purely legal. The plaintiff afterwards, conceiving his claim to be equitable, filed his bill for a declaration of his rights, and for an injunction to stay the levying of the amount of the execution, and to restrain the prosecution of the order under the Interpleader Act. Lord Langdale, M. R., held, that the court had authority to grant such an injunction. (Langton v. Horton, 3 Beav. 464). The plaintiff paying into court sufficient to answer the defendant's demand, the ship and cargo were ordered to be delivered up to him, and the proceedings on the issue were stayed.

It has also been held, that, although in all matters of fraud, equity has a concurrent jurisdiction with all other courts, yet where the case is of a compound nature, so that it may be one of legal fraud, with respect to which a court of law can do complete justice, as well as equitable fraud, or it may turn out to be one of purely equitable fraud, the court will not at once restrain proceedings at law, but will allow the proceedings at law to go on, to try the legal fraud, reserving to the court of equity, if it shall turn out that there is no legal fraud, the further inquiry, whether there is such fraud as equity only can notice and deal with. (Clarke v. Manning, 7 Beav. 162).

The third head under which these cases upon jurisdiction may be classed, is that of interfering with the functions of a special tribunal constituted by an act of Parliament for a special purpose.

By the act of Parliament incorporating a canal company, after giving the company the usual powers to take land, it was declared, that, in order to fix the price which was to be paid by the company for any lands which they should require, in case the company and the owners should not agree as to the amount of purchase-money, commissioners were appointed, who were to call a meeting, upon being requested to do so either by the company or by the owners of the land; and if either of the parties refused to submit to the decision of the commissioners, they were empowered to issue a warrant to the sheriff to impanel a jury to assess the amount of compensation to be paid by the company; and it was declared that the verdict of the jury should be conclusive, and should not be removed by certiorari or other process whatever, into any of the courts of record at Westminster or any other court. There was a subsequent clause, under which the company was authorised to treat with the owner of any coal-works, whose workings should, in the opinion of the company, be dangerous to the canal, for all such coal, &c. as the company might think it requisite should be left for the security of the canal; and if the company and the coal-owner or worker could not agree as to the amount of compensation, then it was to be settled by a jury, according to the clause already cited.

In the case before the court, a dispute had arisen between the plaintiffs and the defendant, not merely as to the amount of compensation that the defendant, who was the lessee of a coal-work, was entitled to, but on the question whether he was entitled to any compensation at all; and the defendant having brought the matter before commissioners, pursuant, as he alleged, to the act, the plaintiffs filed their bill, to have it declared that he was not entitled to any compensation, and to restrain him from proceeding to take any steps for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of such compensation. The court held, that the defendant was entitled to compensation, and that being so, was clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs had no equity, upon an allegation that the tribunal appointed by the Legislature was not competent to decide the questions submitted to it, to withdraw the inquiry from such tribunal. (Barnsley Canal Company v. Twibill, M. R., 7 Beav. 19, affirmed on appeal by the Lord Chancellor).

And, lastly, we will refer to a case upon the jurisdiction to interfere to restrain acts in the nature of trespass. Generally speaking, equity will not interfere by way of injunction in cases of trespass, unless the trespass is of such a nature as to destroy the property in question. But it does not follow that equity will not exercise any interference at all, because the case is one of pure trespass. Thus, in a very recent case, where the question between the parties arose as to the title to a ship, the claim of the plaintiff rested upon his having purchased the ship in a colonial port from the captain, who sold it because it was disabled, and because he could not procure any person to repair it, or to advance money to repair it, upon the security of a bottomry bond. The claim of the defendants, the original owners, rested upon the allegation that the captain had no power to sell the ship, and that his sale did not take the legal title out of them. The circumstances brought before the court on a motion for an injunction were, that the plaintiff, having bought and repaired the ship, brought it home, and was in the actual possession of it, when the defendants sent men on board to take possession on their behalf. The court said the right of the plaintiff (if any) was purely a legal right, and treated the case (on that point) as one of pure trespass, and, therefore, would not grant an injunction to prevent the defendants from interfering with the ship or her cargo, nor to prevent the captain from proceeding in an action on a bill of exchange given by the plaintiff for the price of the ship. But the court thought that it might, if it were necessary, take possession of the ship, to preserve her for the benefit of the party who should appear ultimately to be entitled; and that it ought to put the legal right in a course of speedy trial. The order ultimately made appears to have been, that the defendants should bring trover for the ship; no receiver or manager appointed; and liberty to each party to apply to obtain the possession or the use of the ship, such party giving security to deal with her as the court should direct. This was, in effect, regulating the trial of the legal right, and taking possession of the ship by the court pending the trial of such right. (Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 106). And semble, that, under the circumstances of this case, the plaintiff having a sort of title, that is, claiming under the defendants' agent, who, whether he had actually made a good title or not, had clearly power under some circumstances to make a good title, if it had been shewn that the defendants were about to destroy the ship, or otherwise to deal with it in a way for which damages would not be an adequate compensation, the court would have power to grant an injunction. On this point, the dictum of the court strictly followed the analogy furnished by the cases upon trespass, where the trespass goes the length of taking away the substance of the estate.

In 2 vols. royal 12mo., price 17. 18s. boards, the FIFTH EDITION of GRANT'S CHANCERY PRACTICE, composed anew, and according to all the existing Operative Orders of Court, including the last of 24 May, 1845.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 67. 10s. in strong cloth bds. BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Eastern District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Note.

He has in every case incorporated any of the New Orders by which the practice has been varied with the text of the original work, and he has given expositions of the effect, actual and probable, of those Orders, which exhibit much tact and professional acumen."—Law Mag., No. 7, N. PRINCIPLES of the LAW of REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work with which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupilage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 766.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

LONDON, JULY 18, 1846.

We had occasion some time ago (see 10 Jur. p. 109) to call the attention of our readers to a case very important to solicitors, who are frequently applied to, expressly because they are solicitors, to act as executors or trustees; a position in which the general rule is, that they cannot, under any circumstances, in the absence of specific agreement, recover or retain anything for professional services. The case of Stanes v. Parker (cited in the paper referred to) seemed somewhat to qualify the doctrine, by deciding, that, where cestuis que trustant had had before them for a fortnight a draft of a release to their trustee, who had acted as solicitor, accompanied with, and taking into account his bill of costs by way of debiting the estate, and had then executed the release, they could not afterwards set it aside and disallow the trustees' costs as solicitor. We observed, that, in that case, it did not appear whether the solicitor had distinctly apprised the plaintiffs of their right to refuse payment of his bill, or whether that knowledge was presumed.

A case of a very similar character to Stanes v. Parker has, however, just been decided, which seems at variance with the decision in that case. In the case of Todd v. Wilson, (Rolls, 15th inst.), it appeared that William Todd, by his will, had bequeathed his property to the defendants, one of whom was a solicitor, upon certain trusts, under which they were to purchase an annuity for the lives of the father and mother of the plaintiff, and to pay the residue to the plaintiff. Arrangements were, after the testator's death, entered into, by which the plaintiff became entitled to the capital of his estate; and then accounts were delivered to the plaintiff by the trustees, to whom releases were executed. The accounts contained charges for professional business done by one of the defendants in relation to the arrangements respecting the trust property. Six years after the accounts were closed and the releases executed, the plaintiff filed his bill to have the whole account re-opened. It was argued, on the one side, that, though a solicitor trustee might employ another solicitor, yet he cannot, if he chooses to act himself as solicitor, make any professional charge. On the other side, the acquiescence of six years was insisted upon, and it was said, that the business done related not merely to the testator's estate, but to the arrangements between the plaintiff and his father, the intended annuitant. We are not aware whether Stanes v. Parker was cited, but we conclude that it was not. The Master of the Rolls is reported to have said, that Trotter, (one of the defendants), acting as solicitor, was, so far, both solicitor and client, and that, as solicitor, he was acting for himself as trustee. A solicitor so employed was entitled only to disbursements out of pocket, and was not entitled to charge for his time, professional trouble, or fees. And, accordingly, the bill of costs was referred to the Master, upon the footing of striking out all charges for professional services, except costs out of pocket.

Now, so far as can be gathered from the note of this case which is to be found in the public journals,—the only source of information to which we have at present access,—it would seem that the circumstances are as nearly as possible the same as in Stanes v. Parker. There was in both cases professional business done by a trustee solicitor. In both cases the trustee delivered an account, which was fully placed before the cestuis que trustant; in both cases the cestuis que trustant, apprised of the account, and of the inclusion in the terms of the intended release of such account, executed deliberately the release: but, in the one case, the court thought the execution of the release constituted an acquiescence against the cestuis que trustant; in the other, it thought fit to re-open the account notwithstanding the release.

Unless, therefore, there were circumstances in the case of Todd v. Wilson which do not appear in the report of that case in the public journals, we conceive that it must be considered as in direct conflict with, and overruling, Stanes v. Parker. And, until the doctrine of the latter case, a doctrine which certainly goes much further than any preceding case in support of the claim of trustees to be allowed remuneration, is confirmed by distinct judicial recognition, we apprehend the doctrine must be taken, on this subject, to be restored to its pristine rigidity; and that, in the absence of express agreement, no implied acquiescence on the part of a cestui que trust will bind him to submit to the charge of a trustee for professional business done in his character of trustee. We believe, that, before Stanes v. Parker, the doctrine was understood to be, that nothing short of a deliberate and distinct direction in the instrument creating a trust that the trustee, if a solicitor, might charge for his services,—or, if there was no such direction in the instrument of trust, a deliberate and positive agreement to pay for such services by the cestui que trust, not resting upon mere inference, but referrible to actual contract,—would have the effect of protecting the trustee against the reopening of his account. Stanes v. Parker, therefore, to some extent introduced an element of laxity into the doctrine of the court; and the recent case of Todd v. Wilson restores it to its original state, of which it may be said, that, however rigid and apparently harsh it may be, it is probably founded on reasons of sound policy, and that, at any rate, it is clear and intelligible, and affords, therefore, a safe ground for the conduct of trustees.

POINTS ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTIONS.

III. Doctrine of Acquiescence.

An important distinction exists between the effect of acquiescence as a ground of demurrer to a bill for an injunction, and as a ground for resisting merely the injunction. In the first instance, the acquiescence must be such as wholly to disentitle the plaintiff to any relief; in the second, acquiescence falling short of that degree may be a sufficient defence. (Gordon v. The Cheltenham Railway Company, 5 Beav. 229).

The case referred to turned upon two points: first, whether certain buildings erected and used by a company for the purpose only of housing and repairing their engines and carriages, and not as a station, in the ordinary sense of the word, constituted public buildings, &c. within the meaning of the act under which the company acted; and, secondly, whether the acquiescence of the plaintiff had been such as to preclude him from obtaining an injunction. It appeared that he had continually objected to the proceedings of the company, though he had taken no proceedings so long as he was led by them to believe that such proceedings were merely temporary; but, on their asserting a right to do the acts objected to, the plaintiff filed his bill without any further delay. On both points Lord Langdale, M. R., thought the plaintiff entitled to an injunction: afterwards an appeal motion was heard by the Lord Chancellor, who directed the opinion of a court of law to be taken on the construction of the act. The report does not state whether his Lordship continued the injunction in the meantime.

IV. Of the Jurisdiction to enforce the Performance of a Substantive Act.

In The Great North of England, Clarence, and Harlepool Junction Railway Company v. The Clarence Railway Company, (1 Coll. 507), the principal question between the parties was upon the construction of the act of Parliament, under which the plaintiffs claimed to act,—whether, assuming that the plaintiffs had a right to make a bridge, pursuant to a certain plan, over the defendants' railway, no part of the permanent supports of such bridge being intended to rest upon the defendants' land, the plaintiffs had a right, by way of temporary easement, to erect poles and other temporary constructions upon land adjacent to the defendants' railway, and to pass and re-pass across such railway, doing no vexatious acts, compensating for all damage, and not interfering with the regular traffic of the defendants' railway. The defendants, in order to prevent the plaintiffs from so temporarily using their land, had built up a wall, which effectually prevented the plaintiffs from carrying on their works; and the bill prayed an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing to maintain such wall, and from preventing the defendants from making their bridge &c. In effect, therefore, the bill sought for an order to compel the defendants to remove their wall. The court refused to grant the injunction until satisfied, by the opinion of a court of law, that the plaintiffs had a legal right to build the bridge, and also a legal right to use the defendants' lands by way of temporary easement. But, the Court of Exchequer having certified that the plaintiffs had both such legal rights, the Lord Chancellor, supporting the view of Knight Bruce, V. C., that it was no objection to the injunction that it was in effect of a mandatory character, made the order nearly in the terms of the prayer of the bill. To the same effect is Lord Macborough v. Bower, (7 Beav. 127), in which an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant (who had cut certain channels from one coal field into another, in derogation of an agreement with the plaintiff) from permitting the communication to continue open.

And here may also be mentioned two cases of Whitaker v. Howe (3 Beav. 383) and Taylor v. Davis, (1 Beav. 388, n.). In the former a motion was made to restrain the defendant, a solicitor, who had sold his business to the plaintiff, and, notwithstanding, kept possession of books belonging to such business, from detaining and keeping possession of the books, &c. from the chambers of the plaintiff, and from permitting the same to remain away from the office of the plaintiff. Lord Langdale at first made no order upon the motion as to the retention of papers, not, it would seem, from any doubt of the jurisdiction, but because the defendant's counsel made an offer, which, if acted upon, would have rendered the injunction unnecessary; but he afterwards made the order. (See note, p. 395).

Taylor v. Davis was a case in which, one partner having, contrary to a covenant in the partnership deed, abstracted a partnership book from the counting-house of the firm, an injunction was granted, and continued at the hearing of the cause, restraining him from continuing to violate the covenant.

V. Of extending the Common Injunction.

In Ashby v. Jackson (6 Beav. 336) the case of Thorp v. Hughes (3 My. & C. 782) was cited, and its doctrine acquiesced in by the court. It is to be presumed, however, from what is stated in the report of Ashby v. Jackson, that that case fell more properly under the rule in Whits v. Steinmacks, (19 Ves. 83), as it would seem, that, in Ashby v. Jackson, the fact, that the discovery would be of no use to the plaintiff in his defence at law, appeared upon the pleadings, if at all.

* See these cases distinguished, Drewry on Injunctions, 378.

Since the cases of Mellor v. Oreswell and Howard v. Cliffe, (3 Jur. 817), it has been held by Lord Langdale, M. R., in a case (Archer v. Hudson, 6 Beav. 474) where there was a common injunction obtained upon the answer being found insufficient; then an order to amend the bill, without prejudice to the injunction; and then amendment of the bill accordingly; that an order to extend the common injunction to stay trial might be granted. The motion was made on the 3rd July, and the commission-day was appointed for the 12th. His Lordship appears to have considered the case as distinguishable from Howard v. Cliffe, as he observed, that, if the authority of that case applied, he should refuse the motion. The report of Archer v. Hudson does not, however, state the grounds on which the court distinguished it from Howard v. Cliffe.

The rule, that, in support of a motion to extend, the affidavit of materiality will not do if made only by the plaintiff's solicitor, unless good reason is shewn why the plaintiff did not make it, has been supported in a recent case. (Scotton v. Gaury, 1 Hare, 99).

In the same case, the plaintiff did not move to extend till the 2nd December, the trial being fixed for the sittings commencing on the 6th. It appeared that the action was brought on the 11th August; that the plaintiff, from the circumstances, must have known what was the cause of action, and nevertheless he did not file his bill till the 8th November: and even after that, he knew that proceedings were going on at law, and might have got the common injunction on the 17th November; instead of which he never moved for it till the 24th. Under these circumstances, it was held, that his delay would preclude him from obtaining an order to extend so near the time of trial, unless the answer was insufficient; and, the answer having been excepted to and found insufficient, the Vice-Chancellor looked into it to see whether the defendant had misconducted himself, by evasion in his answer, in which case his Honor thought he might, perhaps, set off such misconduct against the dilatoriness of the plaintiff. The answer was substantially sufficient, though technically insufficient, and, therefore, the motion was refused.

VI. Of dissolving Injunctions.

1. Of dissolving the Common Injunction.

The case of Sharpley v. Perring (8 Sim. 603) was referred to in Bordinave v. Wadson, (1 Coll. 432), in support of a special motion to dissolve at once the common injunction. The court refused the motion, with expressions of want of confidence in the accuracy of the report of the case of Sharpley v. Perring, which his Honor observed was stated to be ex relatione, without stating by whom it was reported. It is to be regretted, that the special circumstances in Sharpley v. Perring are not stated in the report. In Bordinave v. Wadson, there were no very special circumstances, and, therefore, Sharpley v. Perring was clearly no authority for departing in that case from the usual practice of first obtaining an order nisi. The observations of the court in Bordinave v. Wadson must be taken, however, to throw much doubt on the authority of Sharpley v. Perring, for even the limited doctrine, that in any case (except cases of the class of Lacy v. Horneby, 2 Ves. & B. 291) the order nisi can be dispensed with in proceeding to dissolve the common injunction.

The terms of the order nisi to dissolve the common injunction are, that the injunction is to be dissolved unless the plaintiff, his solicitor having notice, shall, on a day (named in the order), shew to the court cause to the contrary; and these terms are considered to be inconsistent with the allowance of any further time to the plaintiff to shew cause. Therefore, where the answer was filed on the 30th May, and the same day the defendant obtained and served an order nisi, the court refused on the 2nd June (the day on which cause was to be shewn) to allow the plaintiff any further time, although the answer was of great length; so that it was manifestly out of all question that the two days could have been sufficient for the plaintiff to look into the answer to see whether exceptions should be taken to it. (Stanley v. Bond, 5 Beav. 175).

2. Of dissolving Special Injunctions.

Where a plaintiff obtains an injunction upon affidavits, the defendant, although he might try the question by demurrer, is not under any obligation to do so, if he thinks, that, by moving to dissolve upon affidavits, he can place his case better before the court. (Barnesley Canal Company v. Twibill, 7 Beav. 19).

It has been doubted, whether, where a special injunction has been granted against several defendants, one of them can move to dissolve without bringing the others before the court. The ground of the doubt is, that, if the defendant moving should succeed, he materially changes the position of the other defendants. The court however, doubted, at the same time, whether, if present, the defendants not moving to dissolve could oppose the motion. (Harrison v. Harrison, 5 Beav. 131).

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, July 15.

Mr. Hume moved the second reading of the Charitable Trusts Bill. As serious objections had been taken to this measure, he thought he should best fulfil the object in view by merely retaining those clauses which secured the accountability of those who had charge of public money. It was the duty of this House, after the expense which had been incurred in inquiries, to have some accounts available, that would shew how the revenues of each trust had been expended. It was not his intention to include the Bible Society, and other religious trusts or charities where the founders were alive, but these only where the individuals were dead. The principle of the bill was to secure the accountability of persons entrusted with public monies.

Sir G. Grey should not offer any opposition to the second reading of this bill; but the House must not suppose that this was a substitute for another bill, which had been thrown out in the other House, or for a more general measure.

Mr. Bernal recommended the honourable member to leave legislating upon the subject, which would be better done by the comprehensive measure referred to by the hon. Baronet.

Mr. S. O'Brien agreed with the hon. member who spoke last, that this measure might interfere with the comprehensive measure referred to by the Secretary of State, which, as he (Mr. O'Brien) understood, was in the contemplation of the Government. He moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. T. Egerton said, the great bodies who were the trustees of those charities either considered themselves unaccountable, or acted as if they thought so, and applied the monies to their own private purposes. He knew of charities that were so managed. When the House came to consider the great and comprehensive measure, let them come to the consideration of it with all the accounts before them.

Mr. Spencer thought that the House ought to be clearly informed how far it was intended to go; they ought to be informed whether or not they were to have all the different foundations brought within the scope of the bill; for example, were they to have King Edward's foundations comprehended within its operation? The House, he hoped, would bear in mind that all the larger charities were subject to the Court of Chancery. He would not say that the House did not possess the right to interfere, because Parliament could do anything; but he did think that a bill of that importance ought to be introduced into the House of Commons upon the responsibility of the Queen's Government.

Sir D. L. Evans could not help remarking, that it might be all very well to say that the Court of Chancery possessed the authority necessary for taking cognizance of these matters; but it should be remembered that proceedings in the Court of Chancery were inordinately expensive. To him it appeared that the objections to the present bill were by no means well founded: it was merely a bill to enable the Government, the Legislature, and the country, to obtain clear and exact information upon subjects of great public importance. Every one acknowledged that great abuses were committed, and the bill then before the House was merely a preliminary step, the purport of which was to clear the way for a more comprehensive measure.

Sir J. Graham referred to the bill brought in by Lord Lyndhurst. That bill, he said, required that trustees should furnish annual accounts, but it made certain exceptions, and he thought that similar exceptions ought to be contained in any bill introduced upon the subject. That bill, unhappily, as he thought, was defeated in the other House of Parliament; and thereupon the hon. member for Montrose inquired of him (Sir J. Graham) if he would consent to a single enactment requiring trustees of charities to present to Parliament a statement annually of their accounts. He told the hon. member that which he then repeated, namely, that he very much regretted the loss of the larger measure, adding at the same time, that a single enactment, requiring the annual production of accounts would, in his opinion, prove a salutary check upon the conduct of trustees in the administration of charities. The right hon. member proceeded to say, that, if it were found that the trustees of certain charities had proceeded in a manner the effect of which was to defraud those whom the donors intended should have the benefit of those charities, then, surely, it would not be an undue assumption of power if a statute were enacted compelling the annual preparation and publication of accounts, setting forth the funds which the trustees received, and the mode of their application. Such was the object of the measure then before the House, and so far, at least, it must be admitted that the bill was not too comprehensive.

After a few observations from several other hon. members, the House divided—tion which treats it as unlawful not to inform the judge of the state of the authorities, and as lawful to press his judgment upon those authorities, in a wrong direction. But the answer is, that the judge expects, and relies upon counsel for the information, and cannot, if he had a memory of forty-counsel power, be possessed of it at the very moment it is wanted, unless furnished with it by counsel; whereas he does not, in the least degree, rely upon counsel to assist him with inferences, and is, on the contrary, well aware, that, on that point, his express function is to weigh the reasonings of counsel, but to act upon his own.

POINTS ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTIONS.

Injunctions to restrain Proceedings at Law.

Where the purchaser of premises from the sheriff, under a sale, in pursuance of an execution, obtained possession, but no assignment, so that he had not the legal title, and the question between him and the defendant was, whether the sale was regular or not, a question which would not be at all tried in ejectment, the defendant in equity was restrained from proceeding in ejectment against the purchaser of the premises, and liberty was given to the latter to take such proceedings at law as he might be advised, to try the legality of the sale, and to perfect his title at law. (Jones v. Hughes, 1 Hare, 383). So, where the allegation of the bill and affidavits were, that A., being indebted to B., B. in his lifetime desired A. not to return the money, but to hold it for C., and that B. never in his lifetime called upon A. to pay him, and, after B.'s death, his executor brought an action against A. for the debt, an injunction was granted to restrain the action, at the suit of the alleged cestui que trust, the money being brought into court, on the ground that the real question, which was, whether a trust was created by B. in favour of C., could not be tried in the action. (M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 458).

Both these cases proceed on the principle, that equity will not suffer proceedings at law, where there is some equitable claim set up by the plaintiff in equity, which, owing to the forms of legal proceedings generally, or of the particular legal proceedings, cannot properly be tried in them. The following case is referrible to a different principle, viz. that equity will not suffer proceedings to be taken at law, where proceedings, in which full justice could be done, have already been taken in equity.

In the case referred to, an estate had been the subject of an administration suit, and had been fully administered, the executor having every opportunity of examining every charge upon the estate, and every particular constituting it; he was, on that ground, restrained from continuing actions, brought without the leave of the court, against persons parties to the suit, to recover property belonging to the testator. (Oldfield v. Cobbett, 6 Beav. 515. See also Oldfield v. Cobbett, 5 Beav. 132).

Injunctions to restrain Infringement of literary Rights.

In a recent case, (Campbell v. Scott, 11 Sim. 31), which was a case of alleged infringement by printing whole passages from the plaintiff's book, the taking of the plaintiff's compositions by the defendant was admitted. The defence was, that the matter taken from the plaintiff was trivial in quantity, and that it was used by way of illustration, and could not injure the plaintiff's sale. The court thought it was not used merely by way of illustration, but formed part of the substratum of the defendant's work; and, as to the question of damnum, it was held, that where there was clearly injuria, the damnum was matter of which the plaintiff was to judge; and an injunction was granted.

It is clearly settled, and this is more on the ground of fraud than of invasion of a right of property, that a person will be restrained from putting forth a literary work in such manner as to delude the public into the notion that it is the work of another; and to this principle may be referred the case of Sealey v. Fisher, (11 Sim. 581), where an injunction was granted to restrain A. from putting forth his work under advertisements tending to produce the impression, contrary to the truth, that it contained matter which was, in fact, the property of B. But if there be no such fraudulent misrepresentation, but only statements which, whether true or false, tend merely to encourage a belief that the matter contained in A.'s work is the truly valuable matter, and that contained in B.'s is spurious and of no value, an injunction will not be granted to restrain such representations.

In Palin v. Gathercole, (1 Coll. 565), the point decided as to the right of the receiver of letters to publish them was this, that he will not be permitted to publish them for the purpose of representing to the public as true, that which he has, in legal proceedings upon that very question, admitted to be false. The circumstances of that case were these:—Palin, the plaintiff, had written to Gathercole, the defendant, who was the editor of a newspaper, certain letters, containing information respecting one Nokes, and Gathercole, from these letters, drew up an article which he published in his newspaper. Nokes brought an action against him for libel, and he compromised the action, paying Nokes costs, and apologising. Gathercole then claimed of Palin half the costs that he, Gathercole, had so incurred, and, Palin refusing to pay them, Gathercole published in his newspaper a statement that the libel upon Nokes was communicated to him, Gathercole, by Palin. Palin thereupon brought an action against Gathercole, and Gathercole pleaded that the matter, however libellous as between Nokes and Gathercole, was matter of which, as between Palin and Gathercole, Palin was the author; but, before trial, Gathercole submitted to what was in effect a general verdict, establishing in substance, as his Honor Knight Bruce, V. C., expressed it in his judgment, that the libel published by Gathercole of Nokes, was not a libel which Palin had communicated to Gathercole. Gathercole then proceeded to shew Palin's letters to third persons, upon which Palin filed his bill for an injunction to restrain Gathercole from publishing or shewing the letters, and obtained an ex parte injunction. The use which Gathercole desired to make of the letters was, it will be observed, to establish the fact that Palin was the author of the libel upon Nokes, the very fact which he had, by submitting to the general verdict in Palin's action, admitted not to exist. Under these circumstances the court refused to dissolve the injunction, permitting, however, the defendant to exhibit the letters to his solicitors and counsel in the cause.

Injunctions in Aid of specific Performance, and to restrain Breach of Trust and Confidence.

A covenant by an articulated clerk to a solicitor, that he will not, during nor after the expiration of the term of his articles, be professionally concerned for any persons who had been, or should from time to time thereafter become, the master's clients, has been held recently not to be so far in restraint of trade as to prevent the court from granting an injunction to restrain the clerk, after the expiration of his articles, from acting for persons who had been clients of the master during the articles; and that although, by the terms of the agreement, the master might put an end to the period of the articles at any time upon one week's notice. (Nicholls v. Hutton, 7 Beav. 42). An appeal was presented in this case, and a case at law directed; but whether anything further was done in it, the writer has been unable to ascertain. It may be thought that this case goes much further than any of the preceding cases upon agreements in restraint of trade, as, by the terms of the covenant, the defendant was restricted from being employed by any persons whatsoever who might at any time during the whole life of the covenant become his clients,—whether the covenantor acquired his knowledge of them through his connexion with the covenantee, or not. In Whittaker v. Howe, (3 Beav. 383), where an injunction was also sustained for enforcing the performance of a covenant by Howe not to practice as a solicitor in Great Britain, although the circle within which the restriction was to operate was very large, the period was limited to twenty years. In that case, the defendants had sold their business of solicitors to the plaintiff, with a stipulation, that, after a certain period, neither of the defendants “should practise as solicitors or attorneys in any part of Great Britain for the space of twenty years, without the consent of Whittaker” (the plaintiff). Howe, one of the defendants, committed a breach of this agreement, by taking chambers near the original place of business that he had occupied, and making demonstrations of commencing practice; and Lord Langdale held the restraint, upon the authorities, not unreasonable, and granted an injunction restraining the defendant from practising in any part of Great Britain.

As it is a breach of a trust in a trustee to exercise any of the legal powers which he may have as such trustee, except for the legitimate purposes of the trust, a trustee attempting so to do may be restrained. Thus, where the indorsee of a bill indorsed to him, without consideration, for the purpose of recovering upon it against the acceptor, for the benefit of the drawer, attempted to bring an action upon it against the drawer, a demurrer to a bill for an injunction against his proceeding in the action was overruled. (Balls v. Strutt, 1 Hare, 140).

Injunctions against Waste by Mortgagor in Possession.

It is well settled, that a mortgagor is entitled to an injunction to restrain the mortgagor in possession from cutting timber, provided it is made to appear, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the land is an insufficient or scanty security without the timber. (Hippesley v. Spencer, 5 Madd. 422). But it is obvious, that, in the absence of authority, there might be as much doubt as to what is, in point of law, a scanty security, as upon any other question of mixed fact and law. In a recent case, however, a sort of rule was laid down as to what is meant by a sufficient security. It is not sufficient if the property is just equal to the mortgage debt and all expenses; but the proper question to be tried is, whether the property is sufficient in this sense, that the security is worth so much more than the money advanced, that the act of cutting timber is not to be considered as substantially impairing the value, which was the basis of the contract between the parties at the time it was entered into. (King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239). The affidavit in support of such a motion should state enough of the facts shewing the value of the security to enable the court to judge for itself.

Practical Points.

If a motion for an injunction is ordered to stand over, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action, and the plaintiff does not proceed to bring any action, the defendant will be entitled to have the motion dismissed with costs. (Perry v. Truett, 6 Beav. 418).

Generally, an injunction ought to be served on the defendant personally, or on some person who, by an order of the court, has been substituted for him.

(Gooseman v. Dann, 10 Sim. 317). And where, before the Orders of 26th October, 1842, the clerk in court of the defendant was served, without order, with an injunction, it was held that that was not good service, because the clerk in court was only the agent of the party to receive notice of the proceedings in the cause; but an injunction is extraneous to the cause, and not a proceeding in it. But, if the plaintiff cannot succeed in serving it on the defendant, and the defendant's solicitor refuses to accept service, service will be ordered on the solicitor. (Kirkman v. Honnor, 6 Beav. 400).

The point decided in The Earl of Chesterfield v. Bond (2 Beav. 263) has been further settled by two later cases, Roece v. Humble (10 Sim. 117) and Lord Harborough v. Wartonaby, (1 Phil. 364). The rule now is, that all motions of course may be made out of term as well as in term, on any day, whether a seal day or not.

C. S. D.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, July 22.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.—Mr. Hume moved the order of the day for going into committee on this bill.

Sir G. Grey said, that, since the second reading of the bill, he had received several communications on the subject, which, though favourable to its principle, shewed an anxious wish to have a measure of a more general character introduced by the Government itself. As the Government were prepared to act on this general wish of the public, and as Parliament had already admitted its principle, which was that of the accountability of trustees of charitable trusts to Parliament, he did hope that his hon. friend would consent to postpone the bill to next session.

Mr. Hume said, that his object was, in one respect, gained, by the admission of the principle of accountability of trustees of charitable trusts to Parliament. He had received several communications on the subject of the bill, all admitting the good which it was calculated to do, but all pointing out how much further it might be carried. Under these circumstances, and as the Government had taken the matter into its own hands, and was prepared to bring in a much more comprehensive measure, he was willing to postpone it in the first instance to Wednesday next.

The committee on the bill was postponed for a week.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION BILL.—On the order of the day for going into committee on this bill,

Sir F. Thesiger said, he believed that his hon. friend who had the charge of this bill had never yet stated to the House the objects and various provisions of it, nor had anything passed upon it in another place beyond a few pleasantries which were bandied about by two noble and learned lords, as to the hopes of the one and the profits of the other. The bill involved a principle which deserved the serious attention of the House, and he trusted that the House would indulge him for a few moments, whilst he explained the view which he took of this bill, and the course he would suggest that his hon. friend should adopt under the circumstances. The House was, perhaps, aware of the state of the law upon this subject. Where a person received any injury arising out of the carelessness or negligence of another, he was entitled to maintain an action to recover damages; and if the person producing the injury was a servant, the action might be brought against the master. But, if death ensued from an accident, all persons were exempted from civil responsibility. Most unquestionably the distinction appeared to be very inconsistent and unreasonable, and he should be prepared to introduce a measure which would have the effect of relieving the law from the anomaly that existed in that respect. By the common law, a personal action died with the person; but statutes had been passed by which the executors and administrators of a deceased party were entitled to maintain an action for any damages which had arisen to his personal property, and in some instances to his real property. Now, he had no objection to continue and enlarge that principle, and to apply it to this particular act, and to say, that the executors or administrators of a person who had received an injury which had occasioned death should be entitled to maintain an action, precisely in the same way as a person would have been entitled provided he had lived. According to the provisions of this bill, if the injury occasioning the death of a person only amounted to manslaughter, an action was maintainable by his executors or administrators; but why should they stop short and say, that, where the injury was manslaughter only, an action should be maintainable, but not where it was murder? Although it was desirable to remedy the inconsistency in the law, that, if a man received an injury for life, he might bring an action, but that an action could not be sustained against the party causing his death; yet the present bill did not seem to him at all calculated to remedy that particular case. He would suggest to his hon. friend who had charge of the bill to postpone it for the present.

The Attorney-General had considerable difficulty in adopting even the principle of the present bill, because it was new to the law of England. If the suggestion of his hon. and learned friend were adopted, the damages given for the support of the widow and children would become assets, and a part would go to the satisfaction of the creditors. That was not the case in Scotland, where the law had worked well. He concurred in the recommendation that the bill should be postponed for a time, so that it might be better matured.

Sir J. Graham felt some difficulty with respect to the measure, and he should be glad to know from the Lord-Advocate whether the practical working of the law in Scotland was satisfactory. The bill declared that "the party who should be liable should be the party causing the death." Now, in the mining districts of the north of England accidents sometimes occurred causing deaths to a frightful extent, every one of which could be traced to the neglect of some subordinate agents employed. It was, he believed, ascertained, that every case of fire-damp was caused by neglecting the free circulation of air, which depended on the constant attention of some ignorant and ill-paid servant. If they put the construction of "causing the death" upon the employer, let the House observe what would happen; eighty or ninety persons might, and sometimes did, lose their lives by these accidents. The owners of these collieries usually had several partners, each of whom would be answerable in damages on separate issues of the trial of eighty or ninety suits, not, perhaps, in many cases, commenced by widows or children, but by the next of kin, who might be living in the East or West Indies, and who had not really sustained any injury for which the owners of the mines should be liable to damages. He should like to know what had been the practical working, in Scotland, of the law which it was now proposed to adopt. If the difficulties which suggested themselves were not, in point of fact, found to exist in Scotland, that would be a strong recommendation in his mind in favour of the bill.

The Lord Advocate said the words "causing the death" would not alter the present liability. The next point was, who were the parties who were entitled to recover? He was not aware that there was any limitation in Scotland as to the degree of relationship which would justify an action in a case of personal injury or death; but a jury would not be likely to give damages at the instance of any very distant relation of a deceased person. He considered that the expression "next of kin," in this bill, was too indefinite, and that the relations entitled to recover damages should be directly specified. In Scotland, the apportionment of the damages among the relatives of the deceased was left to the jury, and he thought the same principle might be advantageously adopted in any measure on this subject which applied to England. In Scotland, however, suits of this nature could not be instituted for the relief of creditors of the deceased, and he would strongly protest against such a power being granted to creditors, either in this country or in Scotland.

Mr. Bouverie then postponed the further consideration of the bill, as well as of the Deodands Abolition Bill, till Monday next.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—William Brown, Esq., of Liverpool, for the county of Lancaster, (southern division), in the room of Francis Egerton, (commonly called Lord Francis Egerton), now Earl of Ellesmere, called up to the House of Peers.

In our last Number (p. 279), the christian name of Mr. Humphry, recently appointed one of the Queen's Counsel, should have been "Joseph," not "James."

LONDON, AUGUST 1, 1846.

THE result following the execution of the sentence pronounced on a recent occasion by a court-martial, has excited so much public attention, that we think we may serve the cause of justice and truth by reminding our readers what is the real state of military law on the subject; for we observe that much misapprehension appears to exist as to the authority under which military punishments are inflicted, and in particular as to the power and responsibility of the officer commanding a regiment, in respect of the execution of sentence. Of course we shall not, in this Journal, enter into any discussion whether the infliction of corporal punishment in the army is or is not beneficial, but shall confine our observations to shewing what is the law upon the subject, and who are the persons responsible for the consequences of carrying it into effect. And, firstly, we must remind our readers, that, if there be one branch of law which is more entirely the creature of the Legislature,—more dependent for its authority upon specific legislation than another,—it is the law military under which the army is governed. There is no power inherent in the Crown, during time of peace, to create or to punish offences specially as military offences, within the United Kingdom. All offences peculiarly military are created, directly or indirectly, by the Mutiny Act, which, as every one knows, is an annual act; and, dehors the terms of that act, there is no such thing as an offence in a soldier, which would not be one at law. So, the authority to inflict particular punishments, either for offences peculiarly military, or for offences which, being military offences, are also civil offences, is given to the Crown by the Mutiny Act, and by nothing else; for, as it is emphatically recited in the preamble of that act, “the raising or keeping a standing army within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in time of peace, unless it be with the consent of Parliament, is against law;” so that the Crown has not only no power of its own to govern the army by any peculiar law, but cannot have an army at all, except by virtue of the Mutiny Act.

The Mutiny Act designates the particular acts that shall constitute military crimes and offences in officers and soldiers, and the particular punishments—at least, the limits of the punishments—with which such crimes and offences shall be visited. Thus, in sect. 1, it designates very minutely the particular offences for which death may be inflicted; among which, it is needless to say that the act of striking a superior officer falls. In sect. 7 it designates the particular crimes for which the punishment is imprisonment not exceeding a given amount, or corporal punishment not extending to life or limb. In sect. 9 it designates other particular offences, for which certain other punishments, comprised within specified limits, are prescribed. Military crimes, therefore, as such, as well as the punishments annexed to them, are entirely the creation of the Legislature, by virtue of the Mutiny Act.

The authority of courts-martial is derived entirely from the same source. Their jurisdiction rests neither upon custom, nor upon usurpation, nor upon any arbitrary power, but entirely and exclusively upon the Mutiny Act. By that act the several kinds of courts-martial are defined; the mode of formation of each is described; and the power of each is described and defined. The following general features, however, run throughout the constitution of courts-martial, as will be collected from an examination of the various clauses of the Mutiny Act and the articles of war founded upon it, viz. firstly, that a court-martial is always convened by the authority or on the representation of the officer commanding in respect of the jurisdiction to which such court-martial refers itself.

Secondly, that such authority to convene a court-martial, is derived either under the warrant of the Crown, issued pursuant to the Mutiny Act, (sect. 5), or under the authority of the clauses of the act itself.

Thirdly, that in no case can the officer by whose authority the court-martial is convened, be the president; but, in every court-martial except a general court-martial, the president is appointed by the officer convening the court.

And, fourthly, that no sentence of a court-martial can be lawfully executed until confirmed by the Crown, or the officer to whom, by the warrant of the Crown, or, in certain cases, by the clauses of the articles of war, the authority of the Crown is delegated.

It does not appear clearly by the Mutiny Act or by the articles of war, whether the officer to whom is entrusted the execution of the sentence, may or may not be a member of the court-martial; but it is to be collected, on the whole, that he cannot. It is not, however, very material, as far as his personal responsibility is concerned, whether he may or may not be a member of the court; for the sentence is not his, but the sentence of the court, and of the officer to whom the confirmation, or refusal to confirm it, is entrusted; and in no case but one would it be possible, we apprehend, for the same officer who executes the sentence to be in any way concerned in the determining of such sentence. For in every case of a court-martial, except a regimental court-martial, the sentence must be confirmed by some officer not immediately commanding the regiment, but holding a higher command, and, therefore, not being the officer charged with the actual execution of the sentence; and, in the single case in which the commanding officer of the regiment might also be the officer having the duty of confirming or rejecting the sentence, it is expressly provided by the 79th article of war, that he shall not be a member of the court.

It may be thought, indeed, that the provision here referred to, of the articles of war, is meant to be general; for, though the 79th article of war has reference to a regimental court-martial only, the language respecting the officer commanding a regiment is very large*, and seems, having regard to the somewhat loose manner in which the articles of war are drawn up, to be intended to apply to a general disability of the commanding officer to be a member of any court-martial; and this construction is strengthened by the cautious provisions that we have noticed, excluding the officer convening a court-martial from being the president.

In practice, we believe the commanding officer of the regiment is never a member of the court-martial. But whether he is or not, the sentence is always, as we have seen, the sentence of the whole court, and subject to the rejection of some person who can in no case whatever be a member of the court. The sentence having been passed and confirmed, is, therefore, the sentence of the law, which the officer charged with its execution has no power whatever to annul or vary: he is wholly irresponsible, whatever may be the propriety or impropriety of the law itself. His duty is simply to see that the sentence of the court is carried into effect. If that sentence is too severe, and leads to results not intended, the persons responsible, if any, are the members of the court-martial, or the Commander in Chief, or other officer confirming the sentence; anybody in fact, except the commanding officer charged with the execution of the sentence, who is a mere instrument, having no power to vary it, and having the simple duty of seeing it carried into effect modo et forma.

* "No sentence shall be executed until the commanding officer (who is in no case to be a member of the court-martial) or the governor of the garrison shall have confirmed the same."

We take it for granted that our readers will not impute to us, in consequence of the foregoing observations, any desire to support tyranny or cruelty, whether inflicted by military or by any other authority. All that we desire to establish is, that the infliction of punishment, pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial, is entirely dependent for its legality upon an act of Parliament; that, therefore, while military men are to recollect that they owe their authority in such matters entirely to the civil power, civilians are to recollect, on the other hand, that, as a consequence, so long as the terms of the act are complied with, the lawfulness of military proceedings is unimpeachable; and that, in estimating the culpability of particular persons concerned in the issuing or executing a sentence of a court-martial, regard ought to be had to the extent of discretion which the Mutiny Act and the articles of war vest in such persons.

Reviews.

1. Common Forms in Conveyancing, including Recitals. By CHARLES DAVIDSON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 8vo., pp. 231. [Marvell.]
2. A Bill, (as amended after Report), intitled "An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Property." (Presented by the Lord Brougham and Vaux). Ordered to be printed 28th May, 1846. Dom. Proc., folio, pp. 100.

Mr. Davidson deserves great credit for the gallantry with which he has entered the ring as champion for the old conveyancing party, unappalled by Lord Brougham's denunciations and the massive bill he wields with so much apparent ease and unconcern. We would gladly have pronounced a funeral oration on all the common forms from which Mr. Davidson has made his selection, but it is to be feared that the Hercules of law reform will not quell his hydra so easily as he seems to expect.

The design and utility of Mr. Davidson's book cannot be better expressed than in his own language:—"This work is strictly what it purports to be, a collection of the common forms used by conveyancers. It contains no special forms, and is intended simply to render the preparation of certain drafts, of frequent occurrence as far as possible mechanical, and to facilitate the mechanical part of the business. For this purpose, the forms of frequent use are repeated in extenso for several different kinds of property, and for several transactions which are nearly akin. The variations in each case are slight, but the saving of time and trouble will be found to be considerable, because, by this means, any person, however ignorant and unskilful, if directed to the forms needed, and furnished with the names to be substituted for the words in italics, will produce a clause requiring little or no alteration, while, if the forms be adapted only generally to the business in hand, it will occupy a good deal of the time of a skilled person to get it into proper shape. For instance, if it be required to adapt the forms in a mortgage to one person to the case of a mortgage to several persons, it will be found that considerable time and labour is expended in a mere mechanical operation, which is altogether avoided by having a form literally adapted to the case. The principle may be carried much farther than it is in the present work, especially in the forms of wills and settlements; but the author trusts that the following forms will, to some extent, afford the draftsman the mechanical assistance referred to."

In short, the book is intended to give us that in print which most conveyancers possess and use, in a more or less perfect shape, in manuscript. The forms are very well selected, and conveniently arranged. The only drawback from the utility of the collection is its meagreness. The book is very thin, and by doubling its bulk its value might have been increased in a much greater ratio. It would then have contained many forms of very frequent occurrence, for which we now look in vain; such as the clauses and covenants in town leases, farming leases and mining leases, partnership deeds, appointments of new trustees, transfers of mortgages, partition deeds, releases, &c. Clauses of this kind would have been much more useful than the four forms of "Trusts of terms assigned to attend the inheritance," to which Mr. Davidson has appended only this laconic intimation:—"These forms are rarely needed since the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112; but there are cases in which terms will still have to be assigned." Without denying the possibility of an effectual assignment of a term in trust to attend the inheritance, under any circumstances, we believe we may safely assert that such a thing is extremely unlikely to happen, and even that an assignment of a term, simply upon trust to attend, (the only case for which Mr. Davidson's forms are adapted), is absolutely impossible. Even in those classes of common forms to which the collection is confined, namely, Purchase-deeds, Mortgages, Settlements, and Wills, many deficiencies are observable. Thus, among the forms in wills, we find a general devise of real estate, of whatsoever tenure, in trust for sale, but no form for enabling trustees to sell and give a title to copyholds without being first admitted themselves;—no provision for apportionment in the forms for creating rent-charges; but, on the contrary, a very absurd proviso, (p. 180), that the Apportionment Act shall not apply to certain rent-charges which could never fall within its operation. Again, among the few testamentary forms, we find none of the ordinary trusts for the benefit of relations and their issue, provisions for survivorship and substitution, &c.

To the rival formulæ of Lord Brougham, Mr. Davidson, in his preface, alludes in no friendly spirit. "The subject of a reform of the shape of assurances now engages so much attention that it may be proper to add, that, in the author's opinion, conveyancers ought to be enabled, by legislative enactment, to dispense with many of the following forms. At present, however, there is little prospect of this being effectuated; the steps lately taken have not been of any use, and there seems no tendency to proceed in the right way. The persons who have taken charge of the reform of conveyancing law, though many of them of great ability and various learning, are none of them conveyancers of experience; and, however able a man may be, he cannot do otherwise than fail when he attempts to reform an art which he has not practised."

We quite concur in this censure on the recent attempts at conveyancing reform, but we must protest against the attempt to shift the blame from the conveyancers. It is to conveyancers that we chiefly owe the absurdities and abuses of the existing system, and it is on conveyancers alone that the discredit, such as it is, of the recent abortive attempts at reform must rest. The persons who have taken charge of the reform of conveyancing law are none of them conveyancers of experience, and have not practised the art? Let us see if this is so: "An Act to simplify the Transfer of Property" (7 & 8 Vict. c. 76) was, if report speaks true, prepared by John Hodgson, Esq., Q. C. The next step in arrears, "An Act to amend the Law of Real Property," (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), is the avowed work of William Hayes, J. H. Christie, and J. Bellenden Ker, Esquires. The substance of "An Act to render the Assignment of satisfied Terms unnecessary," (8 & 9 Vict. c. 112), was obtained by Lord Brougham from Charles Davidson, Esq., after that gentleman had submitted his work "to the revision of a learned friend of great eminence as a conveyancer." (Davidson's Concise Precedents, p. 72). Lastly, as we learn from the third annual report of the Council of the Society for promoting the amendment of the law, the two acts of the last session, for shortening conveyances and leases, and the bill before us, originated with those members of that learned and meritorious body who form its committee on the Law of Property; and the chairman of that committee is Samuel Duckworth, Esq., Master in Chancery.

The truth is, that the successful amendment of any time-worn social machinery requires the co-operation of many qualifications which are seldom united in the same individual, and which, distributed among several, cannot easily be brought together and concentrated with effect upon a given object. And, though the conveyancer is, or ought to be, the most shifty of the children of the law, yet his professional habits are not well fitted for the training of an accomplished reformer. To recognise in a general principle only the fruitful parent of an infinite variety of deformed but powerful and tyrannous dwarfs called "exceptions and qualifications," (the fruit of a polygamous intercourse with sophistry, pedantry, ignorance, error, and expediency); to seek on all doubtful points, not the true rule, but a course consistent, if possible, with the worse as well as the "better opinion;" to ask, at every turn, not "Is this right?" but, "What will the Profession, what will an unlearned judge, or an ignorant or timid practitioner, or a captious purchaser, say to this?" ever to consider private interest as paramount to public convenience; to abet his client in roasting his own eggs in the embers of his neighbour's house; daily to read, compose, write, and comment upon countless folios of the most barbarous, tautologous, and absurd jargon; in short, on every occasion systematically to eschew enlarged and general views, and to bestow equal consideration on form and substance, custom and reason; these are habits which must entirely disqualify any ordinary capacity for the successful development of solid and comprehensive scheme of reform. Whatever may be the cause, certain it is, that, at present, the law owes no great debt to the conveyancers on the score of amendment.

We have on former occasions stated our objections to the principle of Lord Brougham's parliamentary forms. The secret of his lordship's failure lies in the ignorance of the nature of the disease which he has undertaken to cure. The prolixity of conveyancers' language is a cause of great mischief; but the progressive stamp on the deed, and the progressive fee on the draft, which, as they are the first and most obvious of its fruits, are those which alone have attracted Lord Brougham's attention, constitute but a small part of the mischief, and might, if it were desirable, be effectually remedied by a new tariff of stamps and fees. But the ambiguities and errors which increase in a direct ratio with the prolixity of language, the wasting of learned time in drawing, settling, and repeatedly perusing, scanning, and scrutinising folios of superfluous words,—the perplexing of unlearned brains with intricacies, not of fact, compact, or law, but of mere words,—the labour of copyists, and the disgust of every one; these are evils which are perpetually recurring long after the first grievance of the fees and stamps paid on the birth of the parchment monster has been forgotten, and which the adoption of Lord Brougham's scheme would rather aggravate than lighten. The tendency of present practice is gradually to shorten and simplify the language of deeds, to the manifest improvement of its accuracy and perspicuity. Lord Brougham proposes to revive and perpetuate a style which is already obsolete, with the additional annoyances incident to a complicated system of references and interpolations, the mixture of styles, and the use of words in one line in the ordinary sense, and in the next in the parliamentary sense. It is absurd to expect that more than an inconsiderable fraction of the number of judges, counsel, and solicitors, who would have to put a construction on these instruments, could ever become so familiar with the contents of the statute as to see their way without having actually before them the long clauses therein embalmed, whenever they are referred to; so that the measure would practically entail on the Profession a grievous addition to their present labours, for which additional labour, by the express provisions of this very bill, their clients are to pay a proportional remuneration.

Nothing can be more unjust than the imputation of interested motives with which Lord Brougham retaliates upon the solicitors who have refused to adopt his short forms. It is their prudence, and not their cupidity, that is alarmed. "It is one (and not the least) evil of this kind of legislation," says an able member of that body, "that it misleads people as to the true nature and character of the evil to be contended against. Were I anxious to maintain my profession at the expense of the public, I should desire nothing more heartily than the multiplication of acts of Parliament of the kind. They would sow a prolific seed of doubt and litigation: they would create a diversion precisely in that direction which would best suit our own selfish interests. Every session would breed some new code of legal grammar—some legislative dictionary of legal science, until, in a short time, we should almost have destroyed the power of words themselves to effectuate their true end, of expressing clear and definite ideas. Besides this, mere prolixity in deeds is not the evil of which the public complain: it is but one symptom of the evil, and that comparatively slight. The bill of costs, indeed, does include charges proportional to the length of deeds, but it includes a great deal more; and, in most, if not all cases, the quantum of costs is determined more by the integrity, and conscience of the practitioner, in the general conduct of business, than by the mere rule of the length of deeds. In fact, the length of deeds would, by any forced legislative attempt to alter their phraseology, become an utterly unimportant item. Any one conversant with the practice of conveyancing knows, that, even were their length forced by some legislative act into the compass of a nutshell, the bill of costs may be made to swell in other directions beyond the reach of Parliament*."

If an instrument expresses its meaning by the shortest and plainest expressions that ordinary language affords, it will be as short as any one can reasonably desire,—very little longer, and far more intelligible and convenient for reference, than the result of any scheme of legal algebra or stenography that has yet been proposed. The only way in which the Legislature can usefully interfere in this matter is by giving to practitioners some strong inducement to study conciseness; and this the proposed measure does not do; for the provision, that the Master, in taxing a conveyancing bill, may consider the labour and skill employed, is confined to charges for conveyances drawn under the act; and these, we venture to predict, will not be numerous.

Holding these opinions as to the principle of the bill, we cannot be expected to enter into any criticism of its details. If it pass, it will probably become like its predecessors,—a dead letter; unless, which is not very probable, the clause as to allowance of professional charges operate in terrorem upon those members of the profession who may stand in need of such a rod. Monday, July 27.

Mr. S. Wortley asked whether the present Government intended to open the Court of Common Pleas to the Profession. He observed, that, during Lord Grey's administration, a warrant was issued by the Crown for that purpose; but it appeared that the Crown had no such power.

The Attorney-General said a bill would be introduced at once, and he would do his best to carry it through this session.

Wednesday, July 29.

LONDON, AUGUST 8, 1846.

In the last Number of THE JURIST will be found reported a decision in the Consistory Court, which, from the high reputation of the judge who pronounced it, we have no doubt is in accordance with the practice of the ecclesiastical court. But, if it is, it shews that the practice of that court, in respect to the evidence on which it will act, is of a very singular character. The case to which we allude is Noverre v. Noverre, (ante, p. 622), and the question in it was, whether Mrs. Noverre, the defendant, had been guilty of adultery. The evidence consisted of the depositions of servants and others, no part of which went further than to shew that there had been opportunities for the defendant and the alleged adulterer to have committed adultery, if they chose; and that, to use the very language of the judgment itself, "their intercourse was more intimate than could be thought consistent with the relative duties of either of them." There was no evidence, by witnesses, of actual adultery,—no evidence of acts from which adultery could be safely inferred; for, to return again to the judgment, "there was the evidence of three servants, who deposed, indeed, to very few facts, but they proved that there was abundance of opportunity for the commission of adultery, if the inclination existed on both sides." And this was all. Standing alone, it is obvious that such evidence was utterly worthless. It proved nothing but that the behaviour of the parties had been unseemly, and that they had the opportunity of going further if they thought fit. But then there were certain confessions of the defendant: firstly, there was a confession to the father of the alleged particeps criminis. Next there was a letter written by the defendant to the same person, in answer to a letter which was not produced, and this letter the court most properly treated as no evidence. And, lastly, there was a confession by the defendant to another witness.

Now, we need not remind our readers, that, in the administration of our criminal law, confessions are, under certain circumstances, admissible in evidence, and are of themselves, if sufficient in point of statement, conclusive; that is, if an accused person has made a confession under such circumstances as render it admissible, and such confession is sufficiently proved, and goes with sufficient clearness to the question of guilt, the accused may be convicted on the confession alone. "A prisoner's confession is sufficient ground to warrant a conviction, although there is no other proof of his having committed the offence with which he is charged; and it appears, from several circumstances, that his confession may, in some instances, even supply the absence of all proof as to the fact of the commission of the offence charged." (Phillips on Evidence, 8th ed., p. 423). But, by the canon law, (canon 105), it is otherwise: a separation causa adulterii cannot be pronounced upon confessions alone, but there must be other evidence. The question, therefore, is, what sort of evidence. To say that evidence which would of itself raise a strong presumption of the commission of adultery,—evidence of conduct which could scarcely be believed to exist except as between persons who had committed adultery,—evidence on which the person hearing it, would feel that approach to conviction, which falls short of actual conviction by only a slight degree;—to say that such evidence, taken in conjunction with confessions, will support them, and constitute legal proof, is intelligible; but to say, that, if confessions are of themselves insufficient, they shall be rendered sufficient by the aid of evidence which of itself proves literally nothing, is most unintelligible.

If the rule means anything, it must mean that confessions shall not be received and acted upon without some collateral proof shewing a great probability that the confessions are true. If all that the rule means is, that confessions are not admissible, unless there is some collateral evidence to form a sort of peg on which to hang them, but that it is perfectly immaterial whether the collateral evidence shews the probability of the confessions being true, then such a rule is one, the object or utility of which it passes the understanding of any common lawyer to appreciate; and it would be as well to say at once, in accordance with the common law, that conviction may rest upon confessions alone; for that is the substantial operation of the rule, if confessions, not being of themselves alone sufficient, are to be let in, and held conclusive by the aid of evidence, which, like that in Nosserre v. Nosserre, would not of itself afford the slightest means of forming any belief, or approach to belief, whether the alleged crime has been committed, and cannot, therefore, add one particle to the legal belief of the court in the probability of the confessions being true.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE RECENT CASE OF DIETRICHSEN v. CABBURN, (ante, p. 601).

The decision of the Lord Chancellor, reported in our last number, (Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, ante, 601), has again unsettled, though we trust it will ultimately lead to settling, and in the right direction, the long debated question, whether, where a contract is partly of an active and partly of a negative nature, and the active part of the contract cannot be enforced, equity will restrain by injunction a breach of the negative part. In Dietrichsen v. Cabburn all the authorities were cited, except, singularly enough, the only one since Kemble v. Kean (6 Sim. 333) and Kimberley v. Jennings, (6 Sim. 338), in which the doctrine of those cases has been practically departed from,—we mean the case of Rolfe v. Rolfe, (9 Jur. 61), on which we commented in the pages of this journal, (9 Jur. 70). It is singular, also, that, in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, Hills v. Croll, (9 Jur. 645), although cited, was very little, as we are informed, commented upon at the bar, and was left entirely unnoticed in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

In Hills v. Croll, the circumstances of the case, so far as regarded this point, and stripped of the complication with which other ingredients of the contract surrounded the discussion, were, that the plaintiff Hills agreed to supply Croll with certain acids, and Croll agreed to purchase the acids from Hills and from no other person. Now, let us compare this state of things with that in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn. In the latter case, the plaintiff agreed to act as the defendant's agent for a certain number of years, for the sale of a particular medicine, and on specified terms as to remuneration. The defendant agreed to employ the plaintiff and not to employ any other person. It is submitted, therefore, that the agreement was in both cases of the same character; a positive agreement by one party to do something, and a negative agreement by the other party to abstain from doing something. In both cases, the bill prayed specific performance; in Hills v. Croll in terms, and in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn in effect, though not in terms. The two cases seem, therefore, to have had precisely the same ingredients.

They came before the court, however, in different ways; and it will be proper to examine whether that circumstance can have had any influence in producing the opposite decisions that we find in these two cases. In Hills v. Croll, the case came before the court upon a motion for an injunction, and it was refused, as we understand the judgment of Lord Lyndhurst, on this ground, that, as the agreement was one which the court could not perform as a whole, it would not restrain one of the parties from committing a breach of his part of the agreement:—"The bill," said his Lordship, "was filed for the purpose of calling upon the court to declare that that agreement could be specifically performed. Now, there is no principle of the court more clearly established than this, that the court will not decree an agreement to be specifically performed, unless it can execute the whole of the agreement. The question, therefore, in this case will be, whether the court has power, from the nature of this agreement, to execute the whole of it,—every part of it. Part of the prayer for relief, and which is consequent upon a specific performance, is, that the defendant should be restrained from purchasing acids from any body but Mr. Hills; and also, that he should be restrained from granting licenses, except according to the agreement that was in force between the parties. Now, then, with respect to the first of these points, there is a stipulation, on the part of Hills, that he will supply the acids; and there is a stipulation, on the part of Mr. Croll, that he will purchase acids from Mr. Hills, and from no other person. Has the court any power whatever to compel Mr. Hills to comply with that? Can the court order Mr. Hills to continue the manufacture of acids for the purpose of supplying Mr. Croll? Can the court call upon him, if he should not manufacture acids, and require him to purchase acids for the purpose of supplying Mr. Croll? It is clear, I apprehend, that the court has no such power. . . . Unless the court can compel him, by a direct order, to supply Mr. Croll from time to time with the acids that Mr. Croll requires, it is quite clear that this court cannot execute all the parts of this contract; the court cannot, therefore, compel the party specifically to perform the contract. It was thrown out, in the course of the argument, that this court might compel one party to perform his part of the contract, and leave the other party to his remedy at law. No such principle has ever been acted on in this court; it has been laid down over and over again, and in a recent case cited at the bar before Sir E. Sugden, that, unless this court can execute every part of the contract, it will not compel a specific performance of a part. I am of opinion, therefore, according to the facts as they at present stand, and according to the statement of the principle I have mentioned, that, when this cause comes to a hearing, the court cannot restrain Mr. Croll from purchasing acids elsewhere, because it cannot compel Mr. Hills, on his side, to furnish all the acids that may be necessary for the manufacture carried on by Mr. Croll. If the court cannot do this, it cannot restrain the parties at the hearing. It is quite clear, that, upon this interlocutory application, the court cannot restrain Mr. Croll from purchasing acids elsewhere."

It is manifest, therefore, that Lord Lyndhurst considered the granting of an injunction as dependent upon the power of the court to specifically perform the entire agreement; and that, if the case had come before him on demurrer, he must, according to the grounds on which he placed his refusal of an injunction, have allowed a general demurrer; his argument being, not that the plaintiff shewed no equity for an injunction, whatever might be his equity to have the agreement performed, but that, because, on the face of the bill, there was no equity for specific performance of the entire agreement, therefore there was no equity for an injunction. The ground of the difference between the decision of Lord Cottenham in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, and that of Lord Lyndhurst in Hills v. Croll, is not, therefore, to be found, in the one case, coming on by way of motion for an injunction, and the other by way of demurrer; and we see, on the whole, no way of escaping the conclusion, that the two decisions are in direct conflict. That being so, it is much to be lamented that the case of Hills v. Croll was not more prominently brought to the attention of Lord Cottenham, because we are thus left in doubt whether his Lordship was fully apprised of the extent to which Lord Lyndhurst's decision went, and we are therefore left to doubt how far his Lordship, if he had been so apprised, might have considered himself called upon to treat it as binding.

The principle of the decision in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn is, we conceive, this, that the equity for an injunction is independent of the jurisdiction of the court over the acts of the plaintiff; that, on a bill for an injunction, it is not necessary that there should be mutuality between the plaintiff and the defendant; and that, in a case where the plaintiff agrees to do something, and the defendant to abstain from doing something, the question is not, whether the court can perform the entirety of the double agreement,—not whether, if the situation of the parties were reversed, the defendant could compel the plaintiff to do that which he has agreed to do,—but whether, assuming that the court cannot, at the hearing, compel the plaintiff to do anything, it is, therefore, without jurisdiction to restrain the defendant from doing those acts which he has, in express terms, agreed not to do; and the doctrine of the Lord Chancellor is, that the court has jurisdiction to grant such an injunction, whether it is or is not able to direct performance of the entire agreement.

The case of Rolfe v. Rolfe, (above cited), which, as we have before observed, was not cited in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, is consistent with, though it does not go the whole length of, the doctrine of that case. In Rolfe v. Rolfe, Sir L. Shadwell, in granting the injunction, put his decision on the ground that the positive agreement of the plaintiff, and the negative agreement of the defendant, were two distinct agreements; and that, though the court could not enforce the positive agreement, yet, as the bill did not pray specific performance of the whole contract, but only an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative contract, the court could enforce that contract. The difference, therefore, between the two decisions is, that the Vice-Chancellor appears to have thought it necessary, in order to support an injunction, that the two branches of the agreement should be quite separate, and that the bill should be merely for an injunction, and not for specific performance; while the Lord Chancellor treats it as quite immaterial whether the court can or cannot perform the whole agreement, holding the jurisdiction to grant an injunction to be quite independent of the question, whether the court has or has not any authority over the acts of the plaintiff.

In conclusion, we submit that the result of the authorities, as they at present stand, is this: Rolfe v. Rolfe modifies, but does not overrule, Kemble v. Kean and Kimberley v. Jennings. Dietrichsen v. Cabburn wholly overrules them, unless it is itself to be treated as of doubtful authority, in consequence of its having been decided without the attention of Lord Cottenham having been particularly called to the question, whether Hills v. Croll had not decided the very point.

Cases cited in the best Modern Treatises not elsewhere reported. The Third Edition. By R. TARRANT HARRISON, Esq., of the Middle Temple.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds. BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embracing every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superadding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

LONDON, AUGUST 15, 1846.

THE provisions of the 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, concerning actions of ejectment by landlords against their tenants, are familiar to our readers. By that statute considerable facilities were afforded to landlords, and the difficulties created by the formalities which the common law required to be observed in enforcing rights of re-entry were removed. By the 2nd section in particular it was enacted, "That, in all cases between landlord and tenant, as often as it shall happen that one half-year's rent shall be in arrear, and the landlord or lessor to whom the same is due hath right by law to re-enter for the non-payment thereof, such landlord or lessor shall and may, without any formal demand or re-entry, serve a declaration in ejectment for the recovery of the demised premises; and in case of judgment against the casual ejector, or nonsuit for not confessing lease, entry, and ouster, it shall be made appear to the court where the suit is depending by affidavit, or be proved upon the trial in case the defendant appears, that half-a-year's rent was due before the declaration was served, and that no sufficient distress was to be found on the demised premises, countervailing the arrears then due, and that the lessor or lessors in ejectment had power to re-enter, then, and in every such case, the lessor or lessors in ejectment shall recover judgment and execution, in the same manner as if the rent in arrear had been legally demanded, and a re-entry made."

The reader will observe, that, by the terms of the above section, its provisions are to be applicable to cases where the landlord hath right by law to re-enter for the non-payment of the rent. In our last number a case is reported, which shews what is the meaning to be attached to these words, and, as the decision has an important bearing upon the provisions usually inserted in leases, and ought to be well known to those who are in any way concerned in preparing them, we think we may usefully give it a more prominent place in our pages than it occupies in the columns of reports. There may be some of our readers by whom a common-law case, though relating to their own more peculiar branch of the law, would escape being noticed. In Doe d. Darke v. Bowditch, an action of ejectment had been brought under the provisions of the statute we have referred to. The clauses in the lease were very inartificially drawn, but the reasonable construction, and that which was put upon them by the court, was, that, upon non-payment of the rent reserved, the lessor might enter and hold the premises until the arrears were satisfied. Prima facie, this would be within the terms of the statute, viz. a right by law to re-enter for the non-payment of the rent. But, upon closer examination, various reasons suggest themselves for putting a limited construction upon those words; and the Court of Queen's Bench have held, and apparently rightly, that the statute did not apply to such a case. The precise words of the condition were, "to enter on the premises for the same until it be fully satisfied;" and the period for which the landlord was to be entitled to hold the premises was therefore limited to the time during which the arrears remained unpaid. But, by the statute, unless the tenant pays the arrear of rent within six months, the lease is to be absolutely forfeited, which was not intended by the parties, nor is within the terms of the condition. It was upon this ground that the court made their decision. "The object," says that portion of the judgment, "of the 2nd section of the 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, appears, by the preamble, to have been, to remove the inconvenience to landlords from the niceties attending re-entries at common law, and from the obtaining injunctions in equity, and it provides, that, where half-a-year's rent is due, and the landlord has a right to re-enter for non-payment, the service of a declaration in ejectment, in the manner pointed out by the statute, shall stand in the place of a demand and re-entry; and if the tenant appears, and it is proved that half-a-year's rent was due, and no sufficient distress upon the premises when the declaration was served, and that the landlord had power to re-enter, then the landlord shall recover judgment and execution in the same manner as if there had been a demand and re-entry. If the statute had stopped there, the plaintiff in the present case might have been entitled to avail himself of it, assuming that half-a-year's rent was due, and that there was no sufficient distress upon the premises, as he had a right to re-enter upon non-payment of rent, and the only effect of the statute would have been to relieve the plaintiff from the common-law formalities of the demand and formal re-entry, and he would have recovered possession of the premises, to hold until the arrear of rent was satisfied, when the lessee would be entitled to re-enter under his lease.

"The statute, however, goes on, in the same section, to say, 'that, in case the lessee shall permit or suffer judgment to be recovered on such ejectment, and execution to be executed thereon, without paying the rent and arrears, together with full costs, and without filing any bill for relief in equity within six calendar months after such execution executed, then the lessee shall be barred and foreclosed from all relief or remedy in law or equity, other than by writ of error for reversal of the judgment, in case the same shall be erroneous, and the landlord shall from thenceforth hold the premises discharged from the lease.'

"The latter part of the 2nd section applies to the whole; and, if the right to re-enter in the present case is within the meaning of the statute, the effect would be, that, unless the tenant paid the arrear of rent within six months, the lease would be absolutely forfeited, though the condition is merely that the landlord shall enter and hold until the arrears are paid, and the statute would enlarge the terms of the condition, and create a forfeiture where none was intended by the parties. We are of opinion that the statute was not intended so to operate, but that its application is to those cases only where the right to re-enter is absolute, and not, as in this case, quo usque; and the lease upon such re-entry is forfeited."

But, although not within the statute, the landlord might, in the case we have been considering, bring an ejectment at common law. In Co. Litt. 202. b., the case is put. (Litt. s. 327). The feoffor or lessor may enter and hold the land, and take the profits, until the rent is satisfied, with the distinction, important at common law, and, therefore, necessary to be remembered in case the lessee has to bring ejectment to recover back the land, but not admitted in equity, that where the condition is, that, if the rent be behind, the lessor shall re-enter and take the profits until thereof he be satisfied, there the profits shall be accounted as parcel of the satisfaction, and, during the time that he so taketh the profits, he shall not have an action of debt for the rent, for the satisfaction whereof he taketh the profits. But if the condition be that he shall take the profits until the feoffor or lessor be satisfied or paid of the rent, without saying "thereof," or to the like effect, then the profits shall be accounted no part of the satisfaction, but to hasten the lessee to pay it, and, as Littleton saith, that, until he be satisfied, he shall take the profits to his own use. (Co. Litt. 203. a.) It is said, however, that the feoffor or lessor gaineth no estate of freehold, but only an interest by the agreement of the parties to take the profits in nature of a distress. We see, therefore, that, long before the 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, there was a wide distinction between a general condition, that a lessor should re-enter upon the demised premises, and a special condition, that he should enter and hold until payment or satisfaction of the arrears of rent. At the time that act was passed, the Legislature most probably intended, that where a landlord had to bring an action of ejectment, whether in pursuance of a general or a special condition, he should be released from the formalities imposed by the common law. It now turns out, however, that the statute has been so framed as to exclude the latter case; and in preparing leases, therefore, care must be taken in future to adopt the general condition creating an absolute forfeiture of the lease, and not the special and more equitable condition, that the lease shall be quasi forfeited, so long only as the rent remains unpaid. The decision appears to us to be of much practical importance, and one which, as we said before, called for an especial notice.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—It is very much to be regretted that THE JURIST should indulge in such rambling and declamatory abuse of conveyancers, as is contained in the number of the 1st August. The manner in which the qualifications of the conveyancer, his functions, and his motives, are there depicted, I must be excused for characterising as very unbecoming and improper. Nor is it the first time only that the same pen (for I think the article may safely be attributed to the writer of previous papers on Conveyancing Reform) has been engaged in traducing and holding up to ridicule this most useful and honourable portion of the Bar. It behoves, I think, a journal such as yours to evince somewhat more of respect and deference for a body of gentlemen, inferior to none in the profession for honour, independence, integrity, and talent. Wholesale imputations of motives, such as those made against the conveyancing Bar, prove nothing but the unfitness of the writer to discuss the subject at all, and the worthlessness of any theory based upon such insinuations. I always understood that THE JURIST was a journal representing the Profession of the Law, whereas, if one were to go over the numbers of that periodical for two years past, it would appear difficult to find any object more predominant than the issue of sneers, diatribes, and invectives against those upon whom devolves the practical administration of our entire system of property jurisprudence. A large body of men, educated, respectable, and talented, are not generally found to be so thoroughly wrong and depraved as the writer of the review would have your readers to believe with respect to the conveyancers. In their name I pronounce the attack of that opinionated person to be in bad taste, to be founded in ignorance and conceit, to be untrue, unjust, and utterly discreditable.

I am quite willing to believe that the insertion of such articles in your journal is by inadvertence merely, but the fact that this is a repetition of former allies of a similar kind forbids any further silence on the part of,

Sir, your obedient servant,
A BARRISTER IN EXTENSIVE PRACTICE.

Our correspondent is not the only member of the profession whom it has been our misfortune to offend in the course of our observations on the state of conveyancing practice. He entirely misunderstands us, and wastes his indignation on an imaginary offence. We have not made any attack upon the conveyancers; but, since their friends are anxious not merely to exculpate, but to exalt and glorify that respectable body of lawyers, we shall take occasion, while replying to our correspondent's charge, to consider what are the claims of conveyancers on the gratitude and esteem of society at large.

As the offensive passages are fortunately not long, we reprint them:—

"It is to conveyancers that we chiefly owe the absurdities and abuses of the existing system, and it is on conveyancers alone that the discredit, such as it is, of the recent abortive attempts at reform must rest."

"The truth is, that the successful amendment of any time-worn social machinery requires the co-operation of many qualifications which are seldom united in the same individual, and which, distributed among several, cannot easily be brought together and concentrated with effect upon a given object. And, though the conveyancer is, or ought to be, the most shifty of the children of the law, yet his professional habits are not well fitted for the training of an accomplished reformer. To recognise in a general principle only the fruitful parent of an infinite variety of deformed but powerful and tyrannous dwarfs called 'exceptions and qualifications' (the issue of a polygamous intercourse with sophistry, pedantry, ignorance, error, and expediency); to seek on all doubtful points, not the true rule, but a course consistent, if possible, with the worse as well as the 'better opinion'; to ask, at every turn, not 'Is this right?' but, 'What will the Profession, what will an unlearned judge, or an ignorant or timid practitioner, or a captious purchaser, say to this?' ever to consider private interest as paramount to public convenience; to abet his client in roasting his own eggs in the embers of his neighbour's house; daily to read, compose, write, and comment upon countless folios of the most barbarous, tautologous, and absurd jargon; in short, on every occasion systematically to eschew enlarged and general views, and to bestow equal consideration on form and substance, custom and reason; these are habits which must entirely disqualify any ordinary capacity for the successful development of a solid and comprehensive scheme of reform. Whatever may be the cause, certain it is, that, at present, the law owes no great debt to the conveyancers on the score of amendment."

Whether or not this be a diatribe, or rambling and declamatory in style, is a point of criticism which we need not discuss. We think it is not invective, or abuse, and we are sure that it contains no imputation of motives. Its propriety and becomingness will depend in some measure on its truth.

That conveyancers were the framers of the recent statutes relating to conveyancing, sufficiently appears in the article referred to,—that the absurdities and abuses of the existing system (i. e. the verbosity, complexity, and length of conveyances, the reform of which was the subject-matter of the article) might be removed by the conveyancer, without any assistance from without, we have shewn in former articles,—and we shall presently briefly repeat the demonstration. That they are alone answerable for what, under the existing law, is superfluous in conveyances, is an assertion which may pass without any formal proof.

"To recognise in a general principle only the parent of an infinite variety of exceptions" is the fate not only of the conveyancer, but of the adept in every other branch of the English law. Without referring to the statute-book, wherein Chaos rules supreme, is not the direct course of the conveyancer perpetually thwarted by judicial currents, eddies, quicksands, rocks,—styled anomalies, exceptions, departures from principle? Was not Sophistry guilty of Dunpor's case, and the exclusion of the half-blood from inheritance,—Pedantry of Lord Lincoln's case, and the rule as to releases in Litt. s. 222,—Ignorance of Doe v. Hilder, and the hopeless perplexities of the learning as to the raising of uses within the Statute of Uses,—Error of Toulmin v. Steer, (3 Meriv. 216),—and Expediency of Talliarum's case? "The absurdity of Lord Lincoln's case," said Lord Mansfield, "is shocking." (Doug. 722). The settled rule for construing gifts over on failure of issue was pronounced by a Lord Chief Justice (Wilmut) to be "a monstrous absurdity," "a shameful abuse of language," "the most intolerable tyranny, the grossest barbarism," &c. (Keeley v. Fowler, Wilms. 408). That conveyancers must govern their practice by such rules is their misfortune, not their fault.

To endeavour to guard his client against the inconveniences which might flow from even the unfounded doubts of the ignorant or injudicious, is the conveyancer's duty; but the constant performance of such a duty tends to deaden the discriminative faculty and damp the courage which are necessary to a reformer.

"To consider private interest as paramount to public convenience, and to abet his client in roasting his own eggs in the embers of his neighbour's fire," may or may not be the duty of the conveyancer, in a moral point of view; but it certainly is not unfrequently his practice. What was the whole system of attendant terms, to which conveyancers clung so fondly, but a large egg-roasting establishment of the kind described? How does Mr. Preston lay down the rule as to searching for prior claims? "When the purchaser can obtain a clear title to a legal estate anterior to the period at which he would otherwise search for judgments, then, in practice, a search for judgments is not advised. The purchaser may rely on the legal estate, and the rule of equity which protects purchasers for a valuable consideration, and without notice." (Abstracts, vol. 3, p. 339). "The system [of protection from the legal estate] has a tendency in some cases to promote fraud: it may enable a party who has made a settlement to defeat it with greater facility. It appears, too, that, in some instances, it induces a system of selfish caution, with an indifference to the just claims of other persons, since some respectable practitioners have avowed, that, when an outstanding term can be obtained, they advise their clients to omit the usual inquiries by which the existence of intermediate incumbrances might be discovered, and to rely upon the legal estate to defeat them." (2nd Real Prop. Rep., p. 13). And the better to favour this sort of double dealing, it was the approved practice to keep the title to the inheritance altogether free of any allusion to the "attendant," but very independent term.

Lastly, we have said that conveyancers are in the habit of reading, composing, [compiling should have been the word], and commenting upon countless folios [not countless, for every word is counted, for the benefit of the revenue] of the most barbarous, tautologous, and absurd jargon. To put this assertion to a severe test, let us take the commencement of a marriage settlement given by a late celebrated conveyancer, as a model of that kind of draftmanship.

"Whereas a marriage is intended to be [shortly had and] solemnized between the said A. A. and C. B., and the said B. B. hath agreed to pay the sum of £— unto the said A. A. as [and for] the marriage portion of the said C. B., his daughter. Now this indenture witnesseth, that, in consideration of the said intended marriage, and of [the sum of] £— [of lawful money of Great Britain] to the said A. A. [in hand] paid by the said B. B., [at or before the sealing or delivery of these presents, the receipt and payment whereof he the said A. A. doth hereby acknowledge, and of and from the same, and every part thereof, doth release and acquit the said B. B., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them, for ever, by these presents, and for making such provision and settlement for and upon the said C. B., and the issue of the said intended marriage as hereinafter mentioned, and for settling and assuring the hereditaments hereinafter granted and released, or intended so to be, with the appurtenances, to the uses, upon the trusts, for the intents and purposes, and under and subject to the powers, provisos, declarations, limitations, and agreements hereinafter limited, expressed, and declared of and concerning the same; and for and in consideration of the sum of five shillings of like money to the said A. A. in hand paid by the said C. C. and C. E. at or before the sealing and delivery of these presents, (the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged), he], the said A. A. [hath granted, bargained, sold, released, and confirmed, and by these presents] doth [grant, bargain, sell] release [and confirm] unto the said C. C. and C. E., [in their actual possession now being, by virtue of a bargain and sale to them thereof made by the said A. A., in consideration of five shillings, by indenture bearing date the day next before the day of the date hereof, for the term of one whole year, commencing from the day next before the day of the date of the same indenture of bargain and sale, and by force of the statute made for transferring uses into possession] and [to] their heirs, all &c., and all [houses, outhouses, edifices, buildings, barns, dove-houses, stables, yards, gardens, orchards, lights, easements, ways, waters, watercourses, commons, commodities, privileges, emoluments, advantages, hereditaments, and] appurtenances [whatsoever] to the said [messuages or tenements, lands and] hereditaments, [belonging or in anywise appertaining, or accepted, reputed, taken, or known as part, parcel, or member thereof, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, and yearly and other rents, issues, and profits of all and singular the premises], and all the [estate, right, title] interest therein [trust, property, claim and demand whatsoever] of [him] the said A. A., [of, in, to, or out of the said messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises, and every of them, and every part and parcel of them, and every of them. To have and] to hold the said [messuages or tenements, lands] hereditaments [and other the premises hereby granted and released, or intended so to be, with their and every of their rights, members, and appurtenances] unto the said C. C. and C. E., and their heirs [for ever; nevertheless to the uses, upon the trusts, for the intents and purposes, and under and subject to the powers, provisos, limitations, declarations, and agreements hereinafter limited, expressed, and declared of and concerning the same, that is to say,] To the use &c." (2 Sand. Uses, 4th ed., p. 148).

The reading of a marriage settlement has been compared to a sojourn in the cave of Trophonius; but we defy even those who have just undergone the discipline to argue that the words we have inclosed within brackets are of any earthly use, and keep their gravity.

By casting the draft into a different form, it might be still further shortened; thus—

"This indenture, made &c., witnesseth, that, in consideration of a marriage intended between the said A. B. and C. B., and of the portion of £— paid by the said B. B. to the said A. B., the said A. A. grants unto the said C. C. and C. E., and their heirs, all &c., with their actual and reputed appurtenances, and all the interest of the said A. A. therein; to hold the said hereditaments unto the said C. C. and C. E., and their heirs. To the use," &c.

So much for verbosity. As a specimen of "barbarous, tautologous, and absurd jargon," take from the same authority the following covenant in a partition deed, that A. B. and his heirs, &c.,

"Shall and will from time to time, &c., upon every reasonable request, and at the proper costs and charges of the said J. F., his heirs or cestuis que use, or any of them, make, do, and execute, or cause or procure to be made, done, and executed, all such further and other lawful and reasonable acts, deeds, devices, conveyances, and assurances in the law whatsoever, for the further, better, and more perfectly and absolutely granting, conveying, and assuring the same messuages and other hereditaments, with the appurtenances, to the uses hereinbefore limited concerning the same, as by the said J. F., his heirs or cestuis que use, or any of them, or their or any of their counsel in the law, shall be reasonably advised, or devised and required," &c.

A. B. "shall" and his heirs "will"—"cestuis que use"—"any of their counsel," (meaning the counsel of any of them), will suffice for barbarism. With tautology the whole covenant is turgid; but, "will, upon every reasonable request, do such reasonable acts as shall be reasonably required;" "lawful acts in the law," &c., shew, that when synonyms fail, reiteration must be tried. Absurdity is stamped upon the whole by the words "or procure to be made," &c., which make the covenantor engage not only that himself and those claiming under him will execute further assurances, but that they will procure to be made all such further assurances as the purchaser shall require, and render the covenant, which was intended to be qualified, absolute. And these are the faults, not of a hasty sketch, but of common forms, which, during half a century, have been subjected to the daily scrutiny of an educated and liberal profession.

Our former article contained no attack upon the character of the conveyancers, but merely a description of their occupation. We now charge them, not with motives, but with the fact, that they have invented this insufferable conveyancing language, and have persevered in the use of it, in spite of remonstrance and ridicule, until they have driven the laity to seek relief against their own "counsel" at the hands of the Legislature. If this charge is unjust, it may be met in a better way than by calling names.

Need we add, that, in endeavouring to bring under discussion what we regard as grave defects in the practice of conveyancers, our object is to serve, and not to damage them—to make their practices more rational and useful, and therefore more agreeable, and more respectable and honourable. Commerce in land has vastly increased of late, and is rapidly increasing, and with this increase has arisen a demand for amendment of the system of transfer, which will be satisfied. If the leading conveyancers lend their aid to work out the details of those general schemes of reform which they cannot be expected to originate, they will secure to their order the praise of being something more than merely "educated, respectable, and talented," but, if these "angels" of the law decline to tread the field of innovation, they will have to look on and weep, while "fools" rush in, and do the work in a very different fashion.

LONDON, AUGUST 22, 1846.

We have now before us the Small Debts Act, as amended in committee, and as it will probably, ere these pages are printed, become part of the law of land. Being a measure of so much importance, and especially to those for whom our pages are principally intended, we shall at once give our readers a brief account of its more striking provisions, referring them for fuller information concerning its various clauses to the act itself. In short, then, after reciting the late abortive attempts at legislation on this subject, (the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96), for abolishing arrest upon final process in actions of debt not exceeding 20*l.*, the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, giving remedies to judgment creditors in respect of such debts, for the discovery of the property of debtors, and punishment of frauds committed by them,—an attempt to remedy the mischief caused by the former act, and also that portion of the same act by which her Majesty was empowered to extend the jurisdiction of certain Courts of Requests and other courts, a power which we believe has rarely, if at all, been exercised,—it gives power to her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to order that the act shall be put in force in such counties as shall, with such advice, seem fit to her, and that the act shall extend to such counties; except that it is specially provided that no court shall be established in the city of London. In Schedules A. and B. are enumerated various acts for establishing Courts of Requests in different places; and as to these, it is provided that her Majesty may order that any court holden for the recovery of debts within the provisions of those acts, shall be holden as a county court; and thereupon the former acts shall, so far as they would affect such court, be repealed.

We shall, therefore, obtain the advantage at least, of having one uniform system of courts for the recovery of small debts, and be rid of the inconvenience which these Courts of Requests—each having its own peculiar jurisdiction, to be ascertained only by reference to its local act—not unfrequently created.

One uniform rule as to the costs of actions will, as will be seen hereafter, be established, instead of the various rules introduced by the different Courts of Requests Acts. But to proceed with our bill. It is, no doubt, an interesting question to our readers—who are to be the judges, and by whom are they to be appointed? We will tell them. They are to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor—must be barristers of seven years' standing, or have practised as a barrister and special pleader for that period; or barristers or attorneys who, under the provisions of any of the acts cited in the schedules, or of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, before alluded to, have been nominated or appointed to preside in or hold any court constituted or held under those acts. A considerable number of offices will, therefore, be placed at the disposal of the Lord Chancellor for distribution amongst the junior members of the Bar; and when we look at their greatly increased number, and the small chance which many must have of ever attaining to even a moderate portion of professional employment, we doubt not that there will be many candidates. But there is one drawback as they may think, but not certainly as we, or as we believe the public will. No barrister, says the act, while holding the office of judge of the said courts, shall practise as a barrister; and every attorney at law who shall be appointed a judge of the county court under the act, and who shall be the partner of any other attorney at law, shall, within six calendar months next after entering on the office of judge, dissolve such partnership, or vacate the office of judge, and shall not, during his continuance as judge, enter into any new partnership; and no attorney at law who shall be appointed a judge of any county court under the act, shall practice as an attorney, or be, either by himself or his partner, directly or indirectly concerned as attorney or agent for any party in any proceeding in any court regulated by the act, or in any other court of law or equity. There is a provision that the judge of a county court whose name shall be inserted in any commission of the peace for the county, riding, or division for which he is appointed judge may act as justice of the peace for such county, riding, or division, although not qualified by estate. We hope this clause will be acted upon, and that we shall have on each of the benches of the different courts of quarter sessions, one person at least who is qualified by habits and education to judge of the matters that come before those tribunals. We wish the act had gone farther, and had contained some provisions for reforming those courts; but at present we must be content to look upon this as a step in the right direction, and to hope ere long to find the government making some further progress. The greater portion of the bill consists of clauses of a merely technical character, and for which we must refer the reader to it as printed at length. Some there are, however, which we have marked on perusal, as deserving a more distinctive notice. The 60th clause introduces a different rule from what is now the law; for, as to demands recoverable under the act, it takes away pleas in abatement, and provides, that, where any plaintiff shall have any such demand against two or more persons jointly answerable, it shall be sufficient if any of such persons be served with process; and judgment may be obtained and execution issued against the person or persons served, notwithstanding that others jointly liable may not have been served or sued, or may not be within the jurisdiction of the court. The provisions as to juries are the same as have been inserted in most of the local courts bills of late years: they are to consist of five persons, who are to be sworn to give their verdicts in the causes which shall be brought before them, and need not be re-sworn on each trial,—a provision by which some little time may, perhaps, be saved, but of which the necessity is not very evident. In actions where the amount claimed exceeds 5*l.*, either party may require a jury; and where it does not exceed that sum, the judge may, in his discretion, on the application of either party, order a jury. The 69th clause gives a very proper power to the judge, with the consent of both parties, to order the suit and all other matters in dispute between the parties to be referred to arbitration. And the 75th clause contains the novel, but, we think, considering the cases to which the act applies, necessary and proper enactment, that, on the hearing or trial of any action, or on any other proceeding under the act, the parties thereto and their wives may be examined on oath. The next clause we have marked for notice relates to the employment of advocates, and deserves the praise of being of a much more sensible and practical character than those which have hitherto been in vogue. It is rather clumsily framed, and, in fact, embraces three distinct provisions. The first and last parts taken together provide, that no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, shall be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel; and the expense of employing a barrister or attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs in the case of (by which we presume is meant against) a plaintiff where less than 5*l.* is claimed; or, in the case of (against) a defendant where less than 5*l.* is recovered, or in any case, unless the judge shall otherwise order. Another part provides, that none but attorneys of one of the superior courts of record shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting in the courts. And, by the remaining portion, it is provided, that the attorney shall not be entitled to any fee unless the debt or damage claimed exceeds 40*s.*, nor more than 10*s.* unless it exceeds 5*l.*, nor more than 1*l.* in any case; and in no case shall any fee exceeding 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* be allowed for employing a barrister. By this last appears to be meant allowed on taxation; but, with respect to the attorneys' fees, the terms of the clause would seem to preclude them from recovering from their clients in any case more than the sums named. Other clauses give to the judges of these county courts similar powers of examining debtors on oath touching their estate and effects, and the manner of contracting their debts and liabilities, and their means of payment, and of committing them to prison for fraudulent or improper conduct, as were conferred by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127. All actions of replevin in cases of distress for rent, arrear, or damage faisant within the jurisdiction of the county court, are to be brought without writ in the court held under the act for the district wherein the distress was taken, and to be removable, in case either party shall declare to the court that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair, or franchise is in question, or that the rent or damage distrained for is more than 20*l.*, and shall become bound with two sufficient sureties to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and prove before the court by which the suit shall be tried that such title was in dispute, or that there was ground for believing that the rent or damage was more than 20*l.* By the 117th and following clauses, provision is made for the recovery of the possession of small tenements, by plaintiff in the county court, in a similar manner to that of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. Two more important provisions remain: the first, as to the jurisdiction of these courts, which is, that all actions and proceedings, which, before the passing of the act, might have been brought in any of the superior courts, where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly, or in some material point, within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of action brought, or where any officer of the county court shall be a party, may be brought and determined in any of the superior courts. And, next, as to the consequences of bringing an action in one of the superior courts, where a plaintiff might have been entered in a court holden under the act, if a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than 20*l.*, he shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs; and if a verdict shall not be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs, as between attorney and client, unless, in either case, the judge who shall try the cause shall certify on the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in the superior court. These are the principal provisions of the new act, which we are not disposed to criticise unnecessarily, appearing, as it does, very well calculated to meet the want, which has long existed, of some efficient mode of recovering small debts.

ON THE WRIT OF NE EXEAT REGNO.

Some uncertainty of opinion prevails on the question, whether, in order to entitle a plaintiff in a suit in equity to obtain a writ of ne exeat against the defendant, it is necessary that the writ should be prayed by the bill. The authorities, carefully examined, will show that there is no distinct general rule on the subject, but that it will depend on circumstances whether the court will grant a ne exeat in a bill not praying it. In Collinson v. —, (18 Ves. 353), two cases (Loyd v. Cardy Prec. Chanc. 171, and Ex parte Bruner, 3 P. Wms. 312) were cited in support of the proposition that it is not necessary that a bill should pray a ne exeat in order to support a motion for the writ. Both these cases are on a totally different point, viz. whether a ne exeat may be obtained without any bill being filed; and in the first it was held that it may. But this is clearly not law at this day. (Anon., 6 Mad. 276, in which it was laid down—the court being apprised of Loyd v. Cardy—that “the writ of ne exeat is given in aid of an equitable demand; but it must previously appear, by a bill filed, that there is an equitable demand”). And, in the earlier case of Ex parte Bruner, Lord Chancellor Talbot refused to grant a ne exeat when there was no bill filed, saying, “In all my experience I never knew this writ of ne exeat granted or taken out without a bill in equity being first filed.” Upon these authorities, there seems no reason to doubt that the writ is not grantable except upon a bill filed; but, whether that is so or not, it is quite clear that Loyd v. Cardy and Ex parte Bruner do not determine the question, whether, a bill being filed, but not praying the writ of ne exeat, a motion for a ne exeat on the suit so instituted can be supported upon affidavits.

In Collinson v. — (18 Ves. 353) there were three objections suggested to the granting of the writ. The first was, that the affidavit of the defendant's intention to leave the kingdom only went to the information and belief of the deponent; the second, that the bill did not pray the writ; the third, that there was no affidavit of the debt, but that it appeared only by the Master's report in the cause absolutely confirmed.

As to the objection, that the bill did not pray the writ, Lord Eldon said, “When this prerogative writ came to be applied as a civil process, it would have been an extraordinary exercise of jurisdiction to refuse it, merely as not prayed in a stage of the proceedings, when there was no pretence for praying for it. If, when the bill was filed, the defendant did not intend to leave the kingdom, it would have been highly improper to pray the writ*. A groundless suggestion, that the defendant means to abscond, would press too harshly, and would operate to create the very mischief which the court, permitting the motion without notice, means to prevent. The omission to pray the writ, therefore, forms no objection.”

The next case in which a motion was made for a ne exeat, without its being prayed by the bill, was Sharp v. Taylor, (11 Sim. 50). In this case, the affidavit filed in support of the motion shewed that the plaintiff knew, at the time of filing the bill, that the defendant intended to go abroad, though, at the same time, it stated acts, as evidence of his intention, which had occurred since the filing of the bill. The Vice-Chancellor said he could not grant the writ, unless it was prayed for by the bill; and that, as the affidavit in support of the motion stated acts done by the defendant since the filing of the bill as evidence of his intention to leave the kingdom, a supplemental bill must be filed for the purpose of stating those facts, and praying for the ne exeat.

In the most recent case on this point, (Barned v. Laing, 13 Sim. 255), the circumstances were these:—The original bill was filed in August, 1840. At that time it was not pretended that the plaintiff had any ground for alleging that the defendant intended to quit the country. The answer was put in and excepted to, and the defendant submitted to the exceptions. On the 27th January, 1841, the plaintiff obtained information on which he could found a belief, but not such information as would have been sufficient proof of the defendant's intention to go abroad. On the 9th of February the bill was amended, and on the 12th of February, and not before, the plaintiff obtained sufficient evidence for supporting an allegation that the defendant intended to go abroad. On this state of circumstances, the Vice-Chancellor granted a ne exeat, and, on a motion to discharge it, his judgment was as follows:—“If there had been in this case, as there was in Sharp v. Taylor, a series of facts leading to the knowledge of the defendant's intention to go abroad, all of which happened subsequently to the filing of the original bill, and might have been stated by way of supplement, they ought to have been so stated. But, as I found, that, on the 27th January, there had come to the knowledge of the plaintiff, not a state of facts by which he could have proved the defendant's intention to go abroad, but merely such information as induced him to believe that the defendant intended to do so, (and which belief, if it had been stated in a supplemental bill, without alleging sufficient grounds for it, would have gone for nothing); and as I found that the plaintiff had no certain knowledge of the defendant's intention to leave the kingdom until the 12th February, which was after the amended bill was filed, it appeared to me that this was not such a case as fell within the set of circumstances alluded to in Sharp v. Taylor; and my opinion is, that, according to the decisions of Lord Eldon and Sir J. Leach, in the cases cited, this writ ought not to be discharged.”

It is not easy to reconcile these two cases of Sharp v. Taylor and Barned v. Laing. In Sharp v. Taylor, it was stated at the bar that the affidavit shewed the plaintiff's knowledge, at the time of filing the bill, of the defendant's intention to go abroad. In the judgment, no notice is taken of that fact, nor does the judgment seem to proceed upon that, because the court referred particularly to the circumstance of the affidavit stating acts subsequently to the filing of the bill, as evidence of the defendant's intention, and upon that ground it appears to have been put, that a supplemental bill ought to be filed. So, in explaining this case in Barned v. Laing, the court expressly stated, that, in Sharp v. Taylor, all the facts leading to the knowledge of the defendant's intention to go abroad, happened subsequently to the filing of the original bill, and might have been stated by way of supplement. Now, in Barned v. Laing, the facts leading the plaintiff to certain knowledge of the defendant's intention took place also after the bill was filed, and the only difference between the circumstances of the two cases seems, that, in Barned v. Laing, the facts on which the plaintiff could rely as evidence did not occur till after the filing of the amended bill. Whether the court considered the matter stated by the affidavit, as to what took place on the 12th February, as matter not properly supplemental, because not acts of the defendant; or whether, because of its occurring after the amended bill, the court thought such matter could not be brought forward, or that the plaintiff ought not at least to be compelled to bring it forward by bill, does not appear by the report. It is probable that the former is the true reason of the decision, though it is difficult to see why facts from which the intention of the defendant to leave the country could be taken to be sufficiently proved, should not be considered as facts, whether specifically acts of the defendant or not, capable of being alleged as supplemental occurrences.

* It is, however, not thought improper, but, on the contrary, quite reasonable, to suggest, in a bill against an executor or a partner for an account, that the defendant intends to commit waste, and to pray for an injunction; one does not clearly see the reason why it should be proper to anticipate that the defendant will commit waste, and improper to anticipate that he will run away.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, Aug. 19.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer rose, pursuant to notice, to ask leave to bring in a bill empowering her Majesty to constitute a new railway board. The subject had been pressed on the Government by both Houses of Parliament. The committee on railways, in the other House, came to a resolution that it was necessary that there should be some department of the Government so constituted as to command respect, and which should have the care of all railways and canals. That House came to a similar resolution only yesterday. It was in accordance with those two resolutions that this bill was now proposed, in the hope that, by general assent, it might be carried this session. The bill proposed that there should be a railway board, consisting of not less than five commissioners, one of whom should be president, and should be paid. He should also be a member of one or other House of Parliament, and connected with the Government, although not necessarily a member of it, but removable at each change of the Government if it should be thought necessary. It was proposed, also, that there should be two permanent paid commissioners, who should not be removable. In addition to these, it was proposed that there should be two other members of the Government, who should be commissioners, but unpaid. The two paid commissioners would of course not have seats in Parliament, but, it being desirable that there should be in both Houses a member of the board to answer questions and be responsible for the acts of the commission, it was proposed that a member of the Government should be on the board, who would not receive extra pay on account of this duty, but who would sit in that House of which the president for the time being was not a member. It was further proposed that the commissioners, with the sanction of the Treasury, should name the secretary and clerks required; but this would be done by transferring to the new board the clerks and subordinate officers at present employed in the railway department of the Board of Trade. It was further proposed to transfer to this department the whole of the powers now held by the railway department of the Board of Trade, and that the duty should be imposed on them of seeing that the railway companies comply with the acts of Parliament under which they obtain their powers, and that it should be the duty of the board to conduct any inquiry that might be required by either house of Parliament. One thing that would be requisite, in order to render this board more useful, was, that the standing orders should be altered so far as that the notices of bills now required to be given in November should be given in February. This would afford a more full time for investigation into the merits of the different plans. This, however, was a subject for a future occasion, and it formed no part of the present bill. With these observations he would appeal to the judgment of the house, late as it was in the session, to allow this bill to be introduced.

Leave was then given to introduce the bill, which was afterwards brought in and read a first time.

Thursday, Aug. 20.

The Small Debts Bill went into committee, and the clauses up to clause 9 were settled. A material alteration was made in the bill as amended in the Lords, by the rejection of the restriction preventing the judges from practising as barristers.

LONDON, AUGUST 29, 1846.

THE bill now before the House of Commons for constituting Commissioners of Railways, may be considered the germ of most important measures. It is conceived in language so large, on some points, as to permit the experiment of the Legislature referring to a permanent body, the consideration of many matters which are now inquired into by the committees of the two Houses; and it may, 'and probably will, pave the way to the establishment of what has been so often advocated in these pages, viz. a tribunal in the nature of a judicial committee, to consider and report to the two Houses, upon the business relating to the establishment by proposed railway companies, of their claims to the sanction of the Legislature.

The ostensible and immediate object of the bill is to constitute a separate board for the transaction of the business at present entrusted, under several statutes, to the Board of Trade; and it is proposed to be enacted for that purpose, that the Queen shall appoint five commissioners, removeable at her pleasure:—one of them to be a paid president, who may be in Parliament; two to be paid commissioners, incapable of sitting in Parliament; and two to be unpaid, and capable of sitting in Parliament. It is almost a waste of words to observe, that the business and power of the board will be, in all probability, after a very short time, concentrated in the president and the two paid commissioners; and it is not easy to be understood why the two unpaid commissioners, who are obviously intended to be Members of Parliament, should be added to the machinery, unless it be, in imitation of the committee-men of the Commonwealth, to act as organs of Parliament, to watch and see that the servants of Parliament do not become its masters.

By the 2nd clause, the commissioners are to have all the powers now vested in the Board of Trade with respect to railways and railway companies; and this seems to be the immediate object of the bill. But the preamble and the 10th clause shew that it is intended to give the commissioners a much more extensive field of operation. "Whereas," says the preamble, "by an act passed in the fourth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for regulating Railways;' and by another act passed in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops;' and by another act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled, 'An Act to attach certain Conditions to the Construction of future Railways, authorised, or to be authorised, by any Act of the present or succeeding Sessions of Parliament, and for other Purposes relating to Railways;' and by two other acts passed in the last session of Parliament for consolidating in one act certain provisions usually inserted in acts authorising the making of railways respectively, and by sundry local acts of Parliament, certain powers with respect to railways are vested in the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations; but it is expedient that a separate department be constituted for these purposes and for other purposes relating to railways; be it enacted," &c.

And the 10th clause is in the following words:—"Be it enacted, that it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to examine and report to her Majesty and both Houses of Parliament upon any subject relating to any railway, or proposed railway, which shall be referred to them for their opinion by her Majesty, or by either House of Parliament; and especially in the case of any application to Parliament for any act for making or maintaining any railway, it shall be their duty to inquire and report,

- "Firstly, Whether there are any lines or schemes competing with the proposed railway :
- "Secondly, Whether by the bill for such act it is proposed to take powers for uniting with such railway, or proposed railway, any other railway or canal, or to purchase or lease any railway, canal, dock, road, or other public work, undertaking, or easement :
- "Thirdly, Whether by such bill it is proposed to constitute any branch railway, or any other work in connexion with the proposed railway :
- "Fourthly, Whether any plans and sections of any such proposed railway, which, pursuant to any order of either House of Parliament, shall have been deposited in their office, are correct, and, if not, in what particulars, and how far, they are incorrect, and whether or not, in the opinion of the commissioners, such errors as they shall find are material to the object for which such plans and sections are required."

We see, therefore, by the preamble, that the new board is intended to be a department acting for the purposes for which, before, the Board of Trade acted; and for other purposes also, for which the Board of Trade had no power to act. And, by the 10th section, we see that the new board is to examine and report upon any subject relating to any railway, or proposed railway, which shall be referred to it by the Queen, or by either House. Under this clause, it is manifest that a reference to the board might be directed to inquire and report to either House, whether a proposed railway company could make a case for a bill; in other words, either House may, if it thinks fit, under this clause, refer to the railway commissioners precisely the business that it now transacts in its own committees. A board constructed under this bill will not, we conceive, be armed with powers and machinery sufficient to enable it to transact the whole business of a Parliamentary railway committee, nearly so well as such committee; and it is probably not intended by either House at present to part with its privilege of deciding on railway applications in its own committees. But we have no doubt, that, the board being there, and the power of referring matters to it being there, the honourable Houses will begin by referring to it from time to time such matters as they find troublesome, and will gradually slide into the habit of adopting the board, so far as its construction enables it to be useful, as a sort of judicial committee to advise them. If, therefore, this bill passes into law, the first step will have been taken towards the formation of a distinct tribunal for the dispatch of railway business; and we may, ere long, hope to see a regular fixed court established by Parliament, in which such business will be disposed of in a way much more complete, and less expensive, than has yet been known.

ON THE WEIGHT DUE TO SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE.

THERE is a species of evidence on which, ex necessitate rei, much reliance must be placed in a considerable class of cases, but which it has been the fashion of late years to receive with something too much of blind acquiescence. We allude to the opinions of scientific persons, resorted to as evidence of natural or mechanical phenomena. In cases of alleged murder, where the suspected cause of death is poison, and either the fact of poison having been administered, is denied; or, that fact being admitted, the defence is, mistake in the selection between poison and medicaments; or where the fact of murder by violence, or otherwise, is not denied, but the defence is, the state of mind of the homicide;—in civil cases, also, turning upon patent rights, where the fact of infringement of a patent depends frequently on the question, whether certain mechanical combinations are or are not discoveries, or whether they are merely mechanical equivalents for other combinations, —in cases turning upon many other rights of property, in which the mechanical effect of the natural power, such as the force exercised by bodies of water in motion under a given state of circumstances:—in all these, and many others, courts of justice are compelled to call in to assist them, the testimony of persons expert, or reputed to be expert, in the particular branch of knowledge affecting the contested facts, and, to a certain extent, to rely upon their opinions as evidence of the results that must necessarily follow certain assumed states of circumstances. But courts and juries are not bound, and ought not to do what they too frequently do, viz. assume that witnesses brought forward as scientific men, and enjoying a high public reputation as such, have exhausted the subject to which they have applied themselves, and have let nothing escape their notice which might tend to disturb the calculations on which they base their testimony.

We have seen on many recent occasions, that the testimony of medical men has been accepted as conclusive, with reference to the state of sanity of a person charged with crime, when a very little examination of their evidence would have shewn, that, however superior they may be, and naturally must be, to lawyers in their knowledge of the theory and indicia of mental disease, they are yet uninformed on so many points, that their reasonings are, upon the face of them, based on an incomplete state of facts, and, therefore, inconclusive.

On other occasions, our books contain many examples of faith being placed in the opinions of scientific persons, as evidence of facts in mechanical philosophy, which increased knowledge, and that at no very distant period, has shewn to be altogether unfounded assumptions instead of facts. We need only refer to the celebrated instance mentioned by the late Mr. Greley in his work on Evidence, (p. 380). "I may be permitted to observe," says that writer, "that witnesses of this description are apt to make themselves appear less trustworthy, by forgetting that their science has advanced them beyond the ideas of people in general. Mr. Brunel being asked, in cross-examination, before a committee a few years since, (we believe the period of this examination was somewhere about 1826), how fast steam-carriages might be expected to travel on railroads, answered, 'Very possibly ten miles an hour;' upon which the counsel contemptuously told him to stand down, for he should ask him no more questions; and the weight of his former evidence was very much impaired."

Now here Mr. Brunel was treated by counsel as a foolish witness, because such implicit faith was placed in the general opinion of scientific men, who then thought it perfectly absurd to anticipate a speed of more than five or six miles per hour as possible, that evidence so strongly at variance with that opinion would, it was felt, be considered by the court as evidence of the insanity of the witness, rather than of the fact to which he was testifying.

But it is particularly with reference to adopting the evidence of chemists, that the utmost caution ought to be exercised; because, on the subjects to which their studies and experiments apply, differences of procedure or manipulation, so slight as to elude the most vigilant, will sometimes produce the most striking differences in the results; so that inferences totally at variance with truth may be drawn, by adopting as evidence the opinions of even very skillful men. An example of this kind occurred on a very recent trial, shewing the extreme caution that is requisite in founding conclusions for or against a prisoner, upon the result of chemical experiments.

The trial was of a young woman on a charge of the murder of an infant, by administering vitriol to it. The prisoner's defence rested mainly upon this question: whether sulphuric acid, sugar, and water, mixed together in certain proportions, would, in point of colour, produce, a few minutes afterwards, a similar, or somewhat similar appearance, to a mixture of anniseed, sugar, and water mixed in the same proportions. The effect of the evidence generally was such, that upon the solution of this question depended the conclusion of guilty or not.

If the same result as to appearances followed upon the mixing of both sets of ingredients, it established the prisoner's innocence. If a palpably different colour and appearance was the result, it went very far towards establishing the presumption of her guilt.

The question was put to a surgeon of extensive general practice, and his answer was, that the two mixtures would produce similar or nearly similar appearances. After he had given his evidence, and whilst the trial was proceeding, a doubt arising in his mind, he left the court, and, with an eminent chemist, also a witness at the trial, made the experiment. They returned into court, and the surgeon requested the judge to allow him to correct his testimony, stating that he found, upon trial, that the two mixtures produced very different appearances, and he held up in court two wine-glasses, one with the anniseed mixture, which was of a yellow colour, the other with the sulphuric acid mixture, which was perfectly black. The counsel for the prisoner inquired in what order the witness had mixed the ingredients producing the black appearance, and, finding that it had been done in the following order, viz. the sulphuric acid first, then the sugar, and then the water, he required that the experiment should be repeated in court, putting first the sulphuric acid, then the water, and then the sugar. The result of this order of mixing was, that the compound solution was of a yellow colour, and as nearly as possible resembled the mixture of anniseed, sugar, and water.

But for the information, possibly obtained by a mere chance experiment, which suggested to the advisers of the prisoner, how much depended upon the order in which the ingredients were mixed, it is obvious that in this case an innocent life might have been sacrificed to an error in a chemical experiment, resting upon a cause so trifling as to elude the observation of men of undoubted professional skill and knowledge.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—The passing of the acts of last session* "to facilitate the conveyance of real property," and "to facilitate the granting of certain leases," being followed by the introduction of another conveyancing bill in the present session, has necessarily directed much of the attention of the Legal Profession not merely to these acts and bill, but also to the general advisability of the mode of legislation adopted in them.

The proposed bill is too bulky to be treated of in so short a communication as I purpose troubling you with. On the acts of last session I beg to make two or three observations.

The covenants for title given in the second column of the Schedule to the Conveyance Act, and intended to be expressed shortly by the first column, have now become positive covenants, having, previously to 1844, been exceptive; and to that extent the change effected is advantageous, inasmuch as the covenants (that is, the old forms in column 2) now express what the parties intend—what the covenanting party is to answer for,—instead of being, as formerly, a clumsy way of expressing that the covenantor would not be answerable for the acts, &c. of any persons except those mentioned in the covenants. This change is not, however, produced by the Conveyance Act itself, but by the 4th section of the previous act of the same session†, "to amend the law of real property," which is a substitute for the 6th section of the act of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, "An Act to simplify the Transfer of Property." The general covenant for title legally implied by the word "give" or the word "grant," being taken away by the Real Property Act, renders the covenants in the Conveyance Act positive, as just mentioned‡. On the covenant (No. 6) for production of deeds, it is to be observed, that it does not contain the usual, and it might be almost said universal, proviso for the case of the deeds being handed over to a purchaser, &c.

Passing by these matters as of little comparative importance, the great question presents itself, whether it is desirable to frame deeds by the aid of interpretation clauses, or rather interpretation acts,—a question of great importance to all having, or hoping to have, property, and which, to some extent, has been, and to an almost endless extent will be, discussed by various writers in periodicals of all periods, and in pamphlets innumerable. I shall, therefore, remark only, that, if it be a good way of shortening deeds, it might be carried to perfection by referring to the parts of the deeds by numbers; for example: "This indenture, &c., between &c. Property settled, 3000*l*. Consols. Settlement clauses, Nos. 1, 2, 3, &c. In witness, &c.;" or the conclusion might also be a number included in the " &c."

* 8 & 9 Vict. cc. 119, 124.

† 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106.

‡ We think the expressions of our correspondent are not perfectly accurate upon this point, and may lead into error. The old covenants for title were not strictly either positive or exceptive: they are qualified, as distinguished from absolute; but they were never exceptive, and are not rendered, by the effect of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 119, more positive than they were before. The ordinary covenants for title were, and will be still, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 119, simply covenants that the acts and omissions of certain specified persons have had, and still have, no effect in damaging the title and the enjoyment of the covenantee.

Another, and an essentially practical question, is, whether the short forms or abstracts in column 1 of the schedules of these acts correspond with the long covenants in column 2. My attention happens to have been directed to No. 8 in the Lease Act, to which number I shall confine myself, leaving the other numbers of it, and all the numbers of the other act, and of the proposed bill, to the examination of others.

SCHEDULE OF LEASE ACT.

8. That the said [lessee] will not use premises as a shop. 8. And also that the said lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, will not convert, use, or occupy the said premises, or any part thereof, into or as a shop, warehouse, or other place for carrying on any trade or business whatsoever, or suffer the said premises to be used for any such purpose, or otherwise than as a private dwelling-house, without the consent in writing of the said lessor.

That column 1 does not express or even intimate the contents of column 2 is apparent on inspection. But, with reference to decided cases, I would ask, whether any man would suppose, that, by covenanting not to open a shop, he was binding himself not to keep a school. "But now so it is," to borrow a phrase from Chancery pleadings. In Doe d. Bish v. Keeling, (1 M. & S. 95), being ejectment for breach of covenant not to "use or exercise, or permit or suffer to be used or exercised, in or upon the same premises, or any part thereof, any trade or business whatsoever," by keeping a school there, it was held by the whole court that keeping the school was a breach of the covenant. Had the expression in column 1 been "not to carry on any trade," in lieu of "not to keep a shop," it would not have extended to the school; for, in the case cited, the contention was as to the effect of the words "or business" following the word "trade;" it being admitted that keeping a school was not a trade*: and Mr. Justice Le Blanc commenced giving his opinion by saying, "I do not think that the meaning of the parties can be fairly confined to trade, because they have used in addition the word 'business,' which must be intended of something not falling within the description of trade."

It is thus shewn, that, according neither to popular nor to legal interpretation, does column 1 express column 2, or give a clue to the meaning of the latter; but, on the contrary, it excepts by implication, according to the authority of Doe v. Keeling, many of the matters mentioned in column 2. But suppose a house let to a schoolmaster and his school to be made an exception, the clause will then stand, "That the lessee shall not use premises as a shop, except by keeping a school;" after which, who will pronounce law to be the perfection of reason?

With reference to the preceding observations upon the covenants for title in the Conveyance Act, it may be as well to notice that the covenant for quiet enjoyment in the Lease Act retains its exceptive character as operating to restrict the lessor's general liability under the word "demise."

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—William Burton, of Manchester, and Thomas John Barstow, of Dedham, Essex.

MR. BURKE'S HISTORY OF

THE LANDED GENTRY: A GENEALOGICAL DICTIONARY OF THE WHOLE OF THE UNTITLED ARISTOCRACY OF ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND.

This important national work has been undertaken as a companion to Mr. Burke's popular "Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage," and upon a similar plan, in order that the two publications may embrace the whole body of the British Peerage, Baronetage, and Gentry, and may furnish such a mass of authentic information, in regard to all the principal Families in the Kingdom, as has never before been brought together. It relates to the Untitled Families of Rank, as the "Peerage and Baronetage" does to the Titled, and forms, in fact, a Peerage of the Untitled Aristocracy. It embraces the whole of the Landed Interest. The Landed Gentry of England are so closely connected with the stirring records of its eventful history, that some acquaintance with them is a matter of necessity with the legislator, the lawyer, the historical student, the speculator in politics, and the curious in topographical and antiquarian lore; and even the very spirit of ordinary curiosity will prompt to a desire to trace the origin and progress of those families whose influence pervades the towns and villages of our land. This work, abounding in interesting anecdote, and displaying deep research, must rank among the first class of those publications which elucidate or connect themselves with the annals of our country, and is indispensable to the Library of every Gentleman.

N.B.—Purchasers of single Parts of this Work are advised to complete their Sets without delay, as the Parts will only be sold separately for a short period.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 5, 1846.

THE proceedings of the Inns of Court relative to legal education, have lately been noticed by the public press with somewhat of disapprobation. The four societies have adopted resolutions for the establishment of four law lectureships, in addition to that on Civil Law and General Jurisprudence, already established by the Middle Temple. The subjects of these lectures are to be—Constitutional Law, Criminal, and other Crown Law, the Law of Real Property and Conveyancing, Devises and Bequests: those branches of the common law which are not included in the two last two heads: Equitable Jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery. But to these resolutions they have added two others, which, it is said, render the former practically useless. They have resolved that no examination shall be required of any student as a condition precedent of his call to the bar; but that every student shall be required to produce a certificate of his having attended two of the courses of lectures—the selection to be determined by himself.

The Inns of Court have thus shewn the greatest possible reluctance to interfere with the present system of conferring the degree of a barrister, without regard to the attainments or competency of the candidate. We will not stop now to inquire whether this practice has the authority of antiquity in its favour. It would be easy, from the history of the Inns of Court, to prove the contrary, and to shew, that, at one time, the candidate for forensic rank was required to undergo probationary exercises of no trifling character. We abstain from doing so, because, if it be right, or the public interest require, that none should be admitted to the ranks of the Bar, without its being first proved that they are qualified for its duties, it matters not, in our minds, what the practice of earlier times may have been. We regard precedents as valuable only when they support and sanction what is intrinsically right; when they do not, they are useless.

Looking at the subject, then, irrespective of authority, we confess that we have observed with regret the reluctance of the Inns of Court to enforce upon the candidates for admission to the Bar, the acquisition of some legal knowledge. It is difficult, indeed, to perceive upon what grounds the present practice can be supported. It is, we believe, said, that the nature of a barrister's employment, the public manner in which it is exercised, and the intervention between the advocate and client of a competent judge, in the person of the attorney, render a preliminary test unnecessary, and that, without it, those only who are competent, will be employed as advocates. But why should the public, or rather the litigating portion of them, be obliged to ascertain from amongst a crowd of persons, all bearing the same insignia of learning, those who indeed possess it, and those who have but its semblance—what coins are of true metal, and what of false. Rather is it the duty of the State, or, in the present case, of those to whom the State has delegated its authority in this behalf, to present to its subjects for their choice, in matters of such grave import as are entrusted to an advocate, those only who must in some degree be presumed to be competent for the task. But, admitting that, ultimately, the capacity of each individual barrister is fairly and accurately ascertained,—and when we do that, we are granting what is far from being the fact,—why should not this be facilitated by selecting the subjects for public experiment? It is said that the attorney will ascertain the fitness of the counsel; but how is he to do so in the first instance? Either he must personally know the untried man,—a state of things, which, if it were possible, would be far from desirable,—or he must run the risk of a mistake, and peril his client's interest in his choice of the advocate. Both these evils may be almost, if not entirely, avoided by the adoption, not of an examination merely, through which all must pass, but of one by which the various degrees of proficiency would be made apparent. The public would have afforded to them some clue to guide their choice, and the unknown and friendless man of talent, who may now wait hopelessly for an opportunity of trying his powers, would have afforded to him one way, at least, of emerging from his obscurity.

But another objection is started. It is urged, that, under the present system, the Bar receives into its ranks many men of character and consideration in society, whom the study required for an examination would deter from joining them, and that this would be injurious to its present character and position. We deny this. The Bar owes nothing to such members. They have contributed nothing to its fame, nor furnished it, we may venture to say, with one single ornament. Its most distinguished members have come from a very different class. They have been men whose strength lay in their superior intellect, and who, whether from patrician or plebeian ranks, have found in the Bar a fair field for the exercise of their talents—a ladder by which they might climb to pre-eminence and power. Wealth has not enervated those who were so fortunate as to possess it, nor rank made them disdain to enter into the honourable strife. To talk of such men being deterred from coming to the Bar by the dread of any examination, is absurd; and it is the absence of such only that would be any real loss. The presence, indeed, of others, is rather an injury.

We have hitherto spoken of the Bar only with respect to the office and duties of the advocate; but there is another important light in which the matter must be viewed. From its ranks are chosen numerous officers, judicial and otherwise; so much so, indeed, that the phrase "A barrister of seven years' standing" has become proverbial. Does the Legislature, when it uses these words, intend by them to require any qualification in the persons so designated for the offices they are to fill? We must assume that it does, otherwise it would be creating an absurd and unjust monopoly. The confining the choice of officers to any particular class, can only be justified on the ground of its peculiar fitness for the discharge of the duties. How is this fitness secured? What is done to make the barrister of seven years' standing more fit for his office than any other person? Absolutely nothing. He may have observed the forms required by the Inns of Court—forms which have long ceased to have any meaning attached to them,—without ever having seriously perused a single legal work, or, during his attendance at a pleader's or conveyancer's chambers, if custom has obliged him to go there, extended his studies beyond the columns of a newspaper;—donned the wig and gown, and fluttered for a time about the courts, thence retiring to more congenial pursuits, with which to while away the probationary term; after which, if he chance to have powerful friends, he may obtain one of those places for which the Legislature has declared him qualified, and for which his patron cannot be expected to be astute in discovering his incapacity. These are the men whom an examination would keep away from the Bar; or, if they did come, they would be obliged to acquire some knowledge.

We think the honour of the Bar and the interests of the public alike require that some test of fitness should be required. In no other profession, we believe, is it wanting; and, instead of there being any reason for the distinction, there are many against it.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.

The Small Debts, or County Courts Act, has undergone some material alterations since we gave our analysis of it in THE JURIST.

Firstly, as to the conditions attending the appointment of the judge. If he be a barrister, he is not subject to any general restriction upon practice. But, by the 17th clause, it is enacted, "that no judge appointed under this act shall, during his continuance as such judge, practise as a barrister within the district for which his court is holden under this act, except those barristers already appointed to preside in or hold the said courts in Bath, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield, Ecclesall, and Middlesex, and now practising in chambers as conveyancing counsel, who may continue such practice."

This clause is rather singularly worded. It will, however, have, we apprehend, this effect: any barrister, being a judge, may practise in any manner any where, except in his district. No barrister, except the excepted ones, may practise in any manner within his district. The excepted ones, if already practising as conveyancing counsel in chambers, may continue to do so. But they have not any power given to them to commence conveyancing practice de novo, if they have not so practised already.

The 22nd clause is also a very singular one. By it, it is enacted, "that the judges and other officers to be appointed under this act shall be authorised and required to perform all such duties in or relating to any causes or matters depending in the high Court of Chancery, or before any judge thereof, or before the Lord Chancellor in the exercise of any authority belonging to him, necessary or proper to be done in their respective districts, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any general order direct, and for this purpose, and subject to the general rules and orders of the said court, shall have and exercise all such authorities as may be duly exercised by the commissioners or other officers of the said court by whom such duties are now usually performed, and shall be entitled to receive the same fees and sums of money as are now payable in respect thereof, to be accounted for and applied by them as the other fees authorised by this act to be received are directed to be accounted for and applied: Provided always, that the future amount of such fees shall continue subject to the same authority for revising the same to which it is now subject."

The language of the first part of this clause is very large, and would, apparently, empower the Lord Chancellor to refer to the judges of the county courts, such matters as are now referred to the Masters in Ordinary in Chancery, and to the Commissioners in Lunacy. But then the second branch, touching the authority of the judges, seems to restrict the meaning of the first part; for they are only to have, subject to the general order to be made by the Lord Chancellor, and the general rules and orders of the court, such authorities as may be exercised by the commissioners and other officers of the said court, that is, the Court of Chancery, by whom such duties are now usually performed. Now, it is very difficult to ascertain what commissioners or officers are meant; for, having regard to the first part, which empowers the Chancellor to require the judges to perform in a suit, or on any matter arising under the authority of the Chancellor, all such duties necessary or proper to be done, as the Chancellor shall direct, the first difficulty is, that there are no such officers in the districts in which the greater part of the new functionaries will act. Hitherto, certain inquiries have been directed to the Masters in Ordinary, fixed in London; certain others to the commissioners in lunacy, who are ambulatory; and certain duties are entrusted to commissioners for taking answers; to commissioners for examining witnesses, &c., who are ambulatory; and to Masters Extraordinary in Chancery, who are always residing in the country. But to none of these officers are inquiries directed, the answers to which are required for the purpose of informing the court. The Chancellor cannot, therefore, refer such matters as he may think necessary to be reported upon to the country judges, viz. the majority of the judges appointed under this act, because such judges are only to have the authority of the officers by whom such duties are now usually performed; and no such general duties, but only duties of a very limited kind, are now performed by any officers, except the Masters in Chancery in Ordinary. The clause is contradictory in another point of view. The first part, as we have said, is sufficiently general to include references to the judges, of inquiries in lunacy; but the second part obviously restricts the generality of the first part, by limiting the authority of the judges to the authority of the commissioners or other officers of the said court, viz. the Court of Chancery; terms which do not comprise the commissioners in lunacy, who are, in a sense, officers of the Chancellor, in his character of protector of lunatics under a particular act of Parliament, but are not commissioners or officers of the Court of Chancery. The truth is, that the 22nd clause of this act is very ill constructed. If one were disposed to be hypercritical, he might say, that its meaning is quite unattainable, inasmuch as what it says is in substance this:—That the judges appointed under the act are to perform all such duties (without defining them) as the Lord Chancellor may think requisite, and as shall have been performed hitherto by the officers of the Court of Chancery, who have performed such duties. Now, as the duties are unknown, the officers are unknown also, and there is no key to the value of the unknown quantity; so that the clause is a sort of legal problem, in which, the equation being $x = 2 + y$, it is required to know the value of x .

No doubt the intention of the clause was, that the Lord Chancellor should be empowered to refer to the judges of the county courts, inquiries such as are now usually directed to Masters in Ordinary; a proceeding which would in country causes be highly convenient. It remains to be seen whether the Lord Chancellor will be of opinion that the act, as it is worded, gives him any such power.

The 90th section provides, "that no plaint entered in any court holden under this act shall be removed or removable from the said court into any of her Majesty's superior courts of record by any writ or process, unless the debt or damage claimed shall exceed 5*l.*, and then only by leave of a judge of one of the said superior courts, in cases which shall appear to the judge fit to be tried in one of the superior courts, and upon such terms as to payment of costs, giving security for debt or costs, or such other terms as he shall think fit."

This, it may be observed, will not oust the jurisdiction of Chancery to restrain proceedings, if necessary, in the county court, if it shall appear to the Court of Chancery that such proceedings at law would be inequitable.

Correspondence*.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—I have seen with much pleasure, that the Benchers of the several Inns of Court contemplate carrying out the plan of improved legal education commenced by the Middle Temple last year; firstly, by establishing four additional readerships, viz. one for constitutional and criminal law, a second for the law of real property and conveyancing, a third for those branches of the common law not included under the two first heads, and a fourth for equitable jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery; and, secondly, by instituting rewards and honours for those students who shall be willing to undergo an examination before being called. I have always been of those who think that, in the study of the law, much benefit may be obtained through the agency of readings, or, as they are modernly called, lectures. It would be, indeed, strange if that mode of instruction which is thought, and it is to be presumed, found beneficial in almost every branch of learning or art except law, should not also be adapted to assist the studies of the young lawyer. Mathematics are taught in our universities and schools by lectures; medicine, chemistry, anatomy, are taught by lectures; painting and sculpture are taught by lectures; even music is taught by lectures. So, civil engineering and all the practical applications of the exact sciences are taught by lectures. And, if it be right and advantageous to use the method of oral instruction for all these things, many of which are matters of taste and feeling rather than of learning, it would be indeed unreasonable, if, to the study of a subject so much a matter of learning and reasoning as law, the method of oral instruction should be denied.

I do not, of course, mean to contend that attending lectures alone can form a lawyer. Reading, extensive and laborious private reading, must lay the foundation of the learning, without which the utmost talent will not suffice to make a first-rate, or even a respectable and safe, lawyer. But though it is true that, as Bacon hath it, "reading maketh a full man," it does not necessarily make him full of that which is valuable; and if a man endowed even with considerable penetration reads unguided in so vast and labyrinthic a maze of learning as that of the law, he may chance to be a man very full of matter irrelevant and useless, and very empty quoad all that would be really useful to him for the purpose for which he reads, viz. to be "of counsel." Therefore it is that I deem highly of learned readings for the instruction of students, not because, from the readings alone, they will derive that amount or that quality of learning which will qualify them to be of counsel, but because, from the prelections of a judicious reader, they may imbibe vivid ideas of the true character of the science they are about to study, and learn what is the course of private study which will best initiate them in the learning of that branch of the law, which their character and other circumstances make it desirable that they should pursue.

I rejoice also to find that the readings are not to be confined to the general theory of jurisprudence, but are to embrace the laws of this country as they are practically administered in our courts of justice.

There is one feature in the plan proposed on which animadversions have been made, viz. that which leaves it to the option of students for the Bar, to pass an examination or not. It is said, Of what use is an examination, if young men are to be permitted to enter the ranks of the Bar without demonstrating, by passing the examination, that they are qualified for its duties? And it is objected, that, under such a regulation, there will be no greater check than there now is to young men eating their way to the Bar, and afterwards hanging on its skirts in a state of idleness and brieflessness, till they acquire standing enough to obtain the good things that Parliament ever and anon throws in the way of barristers who can count a given number of years of standing.

These objections are specious enough; but I apprehend they are merely specious. It is, undoubtedly, highly desirable that the working Bar should be mainly composed of men above the ordinary standard of intellect and industry; but, in order to insure that object, it is not desirable that no men should be admitted to the Bar who have not, before their admission, manifested their superior qualities; because it is often found that men who are thought inferior in their youth, and, either from idleness or from natural lateness in the development of their powers, make no shew of ability either at college or during their pupilage, manifest, after a few years of actual practice, and when their powers are roused by the incitement of substantial responsibility, all the qualities essential to a great lawyer, in a degree that few could ever have anticipated. Such men are not altogether rare; yet they would be wholly lost to the Bar if a system of compulsory examination were introduced.

Again, if it were established that no man should be called to the Bar who had not passed an examination, it would be necessary to fix the standard of examination either too high or too low. If we fix it at such a height as to test the stronger spirits,—those destined for the higher departments of business,—then we should shut out of the Profession all those men, who, though but of moderate abilities, are yet quite sufficient for the execution of a large portion of what may be termed “the heavy routine business” of the Bar. And that there is a large quantity of business which must be done, and which does not require for its transaction much beyond common sense and industry, is not to be denied. If, on the contrary, the standard of examination were fixed at such a height only as to suit the average standard of talent that can be expected in any large body of men, however cultivated, then it would be no test at all of superiority, and the men capable of distinguishing themselves, and thereby acquiring reputation, would have no such opportunity. The true object of an examination is, that it may be an ordeal so severe as to be successfully achieved only by those who are sufficiently superior to their fellow-men in ability and energy, to make efforts of which few only are capable. By an examination regulated on this principle, the existence of superior men will be made known to the Profession, even although they may have nothing of what is termed “connexion.” Beyond the attainment of such an object, it would be pernicious, rather than the reverse, to press the doctrine of examination. Now, voluntary examination will answer all the purpose of establishing a public distinction between those who have made proof of their ability and those who have shrunk from it, provided the examinations be made really a severe test. It will not exclude from the Profession the men of labour, but of moderate ability, who, as a working mass, are most useful, though, individually, not remarkable; nor will it exclude those who, possessed of talent and strength, either cannot or will not develop it early in life. In fine, it will simply supply the existing deficiency of a legitimate means of making those known to the Profession who do possess, and can early exert, brilliant abilities, without attempting to stigmatise others; and it will bring forward the bold and ambitious, without deterring the retiring and over-modest, who may yet, beneath their crust of shyness, conceal abilities of a high order. I confess that I do think it of the highest importance, that no such principle as that of a compulsory and fixed, and necessarily most meagre, if compulsory, standard of capacity should be adopted, in reference to admission to the Bar; and I trust that no lay clamour will induce the Benchers of the several Inns, to swerve from their resolution of making the intended examination purely voluntary; hoping, at the same time, that the examination will be so substantial and severe, that none but really superior men can pass it at all. If I could hope that any suggestions coming from so humble a pen as mine could be listened to in such high quarters as Parliament chambers, I would venture to suggest that one final examination immediately preceding the call, will not be a fair and true test of the qualifications of the candidate for honours, and that it should not be an examination merely of memory. An examination should be undergone at least once in every course of reading; and it should not consist only of an examination without the aid of books, which merely tests the memory, but also of an examination (such as by giving a difficult case to be advised upon) with the aid of books, which tests the judgment. It would be very desirable, too, that, for students who intend to practise in court, the examination should consist partly in fully arguing some legal question.

I am, Sir, &c.

The following are the minutes of resolutions agreed to in conference, and since confirmed, of the deputations of committees of the Societies of Lincoln's Inn, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn, for the improvement of the existing system of education for the bar.

That it is expedient to institute rewards or honours, by way of encouragement to students willing to undergo examinations.

That, for the purpose of preparing students for such examinations, there be established four lectureships in addition to that on civil law and general jurisprudence already established by the Middle Temple.

That subjects of additional lectures should be,

1. Constitutional law, criminal and other crown law.
2. The law of real property and conveyancing, devises and bequests.
3. Those branches of the common law which are not included in the two last heads.
4. Equitable jurisprudence as administered in the Court of Chancery.

That the lectureship for constitutional law, criminal and other crown law, should be maintained at the joint expense of the four societies.

That the lectureship of civil law and general jurisprudence should be maintained, as now, at the sole expense of the Middle Temple.

And that the other three lectureships should be maintained at the expense of the three other societies respectively, one for each, as shall be hereafter arranged among themselves.

That no examination should be required of any student as a condition precedent to his call to the bar.

That every student should be required, as a condition precedent of his call to the bar, to produce a certificate of his having attended two of the courses of lectures. The selection to be determined by himself.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters-patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto David Pollock, Esq., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay.

PROSPECTUS.

This Society transacts all the usual business of Life Assurance. It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect Security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession) will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NIXSON, Esq., F.L.S., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the Assurance of Young Lives. They embrace participating and non-participating Scales.

In the participating Class, the Assured will be entitled to have four-fifths of the Profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of Addition to the Amount assured, or in Diminution of Premium, as the Parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such Profits for Interest of Capital, or for a Guarantee Fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single Payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at 2 o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying, between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Offices of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information may be obtained.

CHARLES JOHN GILL.

Secretary.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 12, 1846.

WE return to the Small Debts Act, (the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), for the purpose of considering one of the provisions most materially affecting its operation, viz. the 91st, which regulates the mode in which litigants may appear by professional agents, and the scale of fees according to which such agents are to be remunerated. The 91st section is in the following words:—"That no person shall be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or a barrister at law instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party; but no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, shall be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under this act; and no person, not being an attorney admitted to one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting on behalf of any other person in the said court; and no attorney shall be entitled to have or recover, therefore, any sum of money, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than 40s., or to have or recover more than 10s. for his fees and costs, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than 5l., or more than 15s. in any case within the summary jurisdiction given by this act; and in no case shall any fee exceeding 1l. 3s. 6d. be allowed for employing a barrister as counsel in the cause; and the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs in the case of a plaintiff where less than 5l. is recovered, or in the case of a defendant where less than 5l. is claimed, or in any case unless by order of the judge."

VOL. X.

I I

The first thing to be noticed upon the construction of this section is, that a distinction is made between simply appearing for a party, and being heard to argue any question for him. Any attorney, or any barrister instructed by such attorney, may, it would seem, appear in a county court, under the act, on behalf of a party, without leave of the judge; but he may not argue a question without such leave. What he may do under the head of "appearing," is not clear. Probably, the intention is, that he may examine witnesses, and generally advise the party how to proceed, and do, in fact, anything short of addressing an argument to the court; but, as it is not a very easy matter to say what is mere commentary on the proceedings as they occur, not being argument, and what is argument, it will follow, that, where the court refuses leave to argue, unless it is also ruled, that the professional person appearing, is prohibited from opening his lips, except by way of private advice to his client, the course of proceeding will be likely to be a running fight between the advocate and the judge, the advocate struggling to get as near an argument as he can, and the judge perpetually checking and interrupting him. For their own comfort, we doubt not that the judges will, in all cases where a professional person is employed, give him leave to appear and conduct his client's case throughout.

With regard to the fees, there can be no doubt that the intention of the Legislature was, that no attorney should be entitled to have or recover, for the whole business of conducting a case in and out of court, more than the prescribed fees, viz. 10s. if the debt is under 5l., and 15s. if the debt is above that; but whether the language of the section carries this intention into execution, is another question. The restriction upon the attorney's claim to fees is for "appearing or acting on behalf of any other person in the said court." The question will turn, therefore, upon the meaning of the words "in the said court." Will those words include all business done in relation to a litigation conducted in the county court, or will they be confined to the business actually of record? Suppose a claim brought on a balance of an account between a higgler and a petty publican, the account consisting of some hundreds of loose scraps of paper on either side, mixed up with parol evidence of petty payments: would the attorney's labour in advising his client upon the value, as evidence, of his various proofs, and the other pleasant little points which might arise in such a case, if a plaint was filed, be acting in his behalf in the said court? Or take a running-down case, or any other case, trivial or not, where much evidence would have to be collected and sifted before a party could be advised to file his plaint: would the attorney's preliminary advice and assistance be within the words of the 91st section? If it would not, then that section is plainly emasculated; if it would, then it is more than doubtful whether the effect of the 91st section will not be to make it impracticable for the services of a competent attorney to be obtained, in the very and only class of cases in which, under this act, they would be requisite, viz. where there are difficulties of fact or law; for it will be observed, that the words prohibiting the attorney from receiving more than the specified costs are very strong—"he shall not be entitled either to have or to recover." It is clear, that, under this section, an express agreement for larger fees would not be binding on the client; and we conceive that the clause goes further, and that the attorney could not even retain fees voluntarily paid, since he is not entitled to have, which must here, we apprehend, mean to hold.

But, though the Legislature appears to have been so very anxious to prevent the expense of the ordinary business of these courts from being swollen by the intervention of attorneys with bills of costs on the ordinary scale, and though it appears also to have intended to exclude the increase of expense by the intervention of counsel, by declaring that in no case shall a fee exceeding one guinea be allowed for employing counsel, this last clause entirely loses its protective force, by the absence of any attempt (an attempt which we do not say ought to have been made) to apply to the barrister, the personal prohibition laid upon the attorney, against his having a larger fee than the prescribed one. The consequence is, that, though, clearly, no attorney could recover from his client a fee paid by him to counsel exceeding one guinea, there is nothing to prevent the party giving to his attorney voluntarily, any sum that he thinks fit to instruct him to give to counsel; and clearly the fee could not be recovered back from counsel. We see nothing, therefore, in this act that should prevent a suitor in the county court, having obtained leave to appear and argue by counsel, from retaining, if rich enough, counsel of the greatest eminence. Clearly, this was never contemplated by the Legislature, and so far the 91st section has miscarried.

There is, undoubtedly, infinite difficulty in constituting a court for administering justice, which shall be both cheap and good, and decorously administered. If a miserable scale of fees, such as that of the present act, is enforced, the tendency is to introduce a very low standard of practice; if such a scale is not enforced, then farewell to cheap justice. We confess we have not brilliant anticipations of the working of any County Courts Act that does not proceed upon the plan so often advocated in this journal, of providing public advocates and attorneys, paid, in part, at any rate, by the state. If the poor man is entitled to cheap justice, and if it be the fact, that he cannot get it good as well as cheap, in courts constituted on ordinary principles, why should the state, while holding itself liable to create judges expressly for him, conceive it an infringement of the rights of other classes—an unwarrantable tax upon the public purse—to give him that; and which it is admitted, by the very acts of the Legislature itself, he cannot pay for, and without which good judges can only half help him, viz. competent professional assistance?

Whereas in certain cases of felony the court is not empowered by law to award sentence of transportation for a less period than the term of the offender's life, or some long term of years, or sentence of imprisonment for any shorter term than two years; but it is desirable that some such offenders should suffer transportation or imprisonment for a shorter period respectively, at the discretion of the court before which they are convicted: Now, be it enacted, &c., that, in all cases where the court is now by law empowered or required to award a sentence of transportation exceeding seven years, it shall be lawful for such court, at its discretion, to award a sentence of transportation for a term of years not less than seven years, or to award such sentence of imprisonment for any period not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, as shall to the court, in its discretion, appear just, under all the circumstances.

34. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas it is expedient to facilitate the dissolution of certain railway companies as hereafter mentioned, and to afford facilities for the winding up the concerns of such companies: May it therefore please your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, &c., That when any persons or companies, before the passing of this act, shall have entered into any contract usually called a subscription contract, or any other agreement or agreements, in writing or otherwise, for the formation of a company or partnership for making any railway which cannot be carried into execution without obtaining the authority of Parliament, and in respect of which an act shall not before the passing of this act have been obtained, it shall be lawful for such persons or companies to dissolve the said company or partnership, contract, or agreement, in manner hereinafter mentioned, and that whether or not such contract or agreement shall contain any powers or provisions for dissolution of the company or partnership intended to be thereby formed: Provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any such persons or companies from exercising any such power or provision for dissolution in their contract or agreement contained, if they shall see fit, at any time before availing themselves of the powers in this act contained: Provided also, that the provisions of this act shall be taken to apply to any contract or partnership for the making any railway, notwithstanding that the agreement or partnership may relate to any other objects in connexion therewith; and (unless a separate capital and separate subscription shall exist as regards the different objects) then, on a dissolution under the provisions of this act, the dissolution shall extend to the whole objects of the contract or partnership.

2. That it shall be lawful for the committee, provisional directors, or other persons by such contract or agreement as aforesaid intrusted with the management and carrying into effect of the undertaking, and who are hereinafter called "the committee," to call a meeting of the shareholders for the purpose of determining whether the partnership or company so as aforesaid intended to be formed (and which is hereinafter called "the company") shall be dissolved; and that if such meeting shall determine, as after mentioned, that the company shall be dissolved, then, as from the date of the resolution come to at such meeting, the company shall be taken to be dissolved, and the committee shall not have power to proceed any further with the undertaking.

3. That it shall be lawful for any five shareholders, as after defined, by writing under their hands, to require the committee to call a meeting for the purpose aforesaid; and that if the committee shall refuse or neglect, for six days after any such requisition shall have been left at the registered place of business of the company, as regards England and Ireland, and, as regards Scotland, at the usual place of business, or shall have been served personally on any member of the committee, to call such meeting by notice as after mentioned, or if for any reason whatever such meeting shall not be convened and held in pursuance of the directions herein contained, it shall be lawful for any five shareholders to call such meeting; and after any such requisition shall have been left or served as aforesaid, it shall not be lawful for the committee or any of them to make any payments out of the monies of such company, except in discharge of bona fide debts or liabilities, or in performance of contracts or engagements, previously entered into, and in payment of the expenses of calling and holding such meeting or any adjourned meeting, nor to enter into any contracts or engagements on behalf of the company or affecting the property thereof, nor to issue any shares or scrip or representing the capital stock of such company, until the meeting called as aforesaid shall have determined the question of dissolution.

4. That the meeting shall be held to have been duly called, although the votes of the parties calling the same, or any of such votes, shall be disallowed at the meeting by the scrutineers to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned.

5. That the calling of any such meeting shall be by notice, signed either on behalf of the committee by any one member of the same, or in case the meeting shall be called by the shareholders, then by the shareholders calling the same, such notice to be advertised in the London Gazette eight clear days and not more than fifteen days before the time to be therein fixed for holding such meeting, and also, within the before-mentioned limits as to time, in three London daily newspapers; that in the case of railways to be made in Ireland, the said notice shall also be advertised, within the before-mentioned limits as to time, in the Dublin Gazette and in two newspapers in common circulation in the city of Dublin; and as to railways to be made in Scotland, the said notice shall also be advertised, within the before-mentioned limits as to time, in the Edinburgh Gazette, and in two newspapers in common circulation in the city of Edinburgh.

6. That every notice of meeting shall specify the day, hour, place, and purpose of meeting; and the parties entitled to be present at such meeting shall be the persons producing the shares, scrip, or receipts hereinafter defined, or the proxies after mentioned.

7. That every meeting so called shall elect a chairman within one hour of the time appointed for holding such meeting, and that the person to be in the chair at every such meeting shall be some member of the committee, to be elected by a majority of the members of the committee present at the meeting, and in case the votes of the members of the committee present shall be equally divided, or if from any cause there shall be no member of the committee so elected, then some shareholder entitled to vote shall be elected by the meeting; and every person present, either in respect of shares or of a proxy, shall have one vote only for the election of the chairman and scrutineers; and every chairman shall have a casting vote, in addition to any other vote which he may be entitled to; and if any chairman shall refuse to give his casting vote on the question of dissolution or bankruptcy as after mentioned, the question shall be considered as carried in the affirmative for dissolution or bankruptcy.

8. That the chairman at every such meeting shall be bound to put to the meeting any question proposed for the dissolution of the company, or as to the bankruptcy thereof, and also as to the election of scrutineers, and that no business shall be transacted at any such meeting other than the consideration of any question so proposed, and the election of a chairman and scrutineers.

9. That immediately after the election of a chairman the meeting shall proceed to elect as scrutineers three shareholders in the company, whose business it shall be to verify as after mentioned, and take the votes of the shareholders entitled to vote, and cast up and declare the same; and the decision in writing of them, or of any two of them, shall be final in all respects.

10. That in case it shall be discovered by or shewn to the scrutineers that the chairman at any meeting is not entitled to vote as a shareholder, it shall be lawful for the meeting either to elect a new chairman or to maintain such existing chairman, but such chairman so maintained in office shall not thereby acquire the right of voting as a shareholder, or of giving a casting vote; and in case the votes shall be equally divided the resolutions shall be considered as carried in the affirmative for the dissolution and as to the bankruptcy of the company: Provided always, that all votes, acts, and deeds by any chairman not entitled to vote, or by the meeting presided over by him, given or done before the discovery of his not being so entitled, or given afterwards if he be so maintained, shall be valid and effectual; and, as regards the election of chairman and scrutineers by the votes of the parties present, and producing scrip or proxies, no objection after the election shall be made on its being shewn that they were not entitled to be present.

11. That at any such meeting as aforesaid, in the event of the prescribed quorum after mentioned not being present and voting at such meeting, then the chairman shall cause the votes of the persons constituting the said meeting to be taken and recorded, and shall then adjourn the same to be held at the same place, and at a day to be declared by the chairman, each day not being less than three days and not more than one week from the original day of meeting, such day and time of meeting in the meantime, as regards any meeting held in any part of England, being advertised twice in each of three London daily newspapers, and in the case of a meeting held at Edinburgh twice in two Edinburgh newspapers, and in the case of a meeting held in Dublin twice in two Dublin newspapers, and at such adjourned meeting the votes of such persons constituting the same as had not voted at the original meeting shall be taken and recorded, and the total amount of votes given at the original and adjourned meeting shall be received as if given at one and the same meeting.

12. That the only persons entitled to be present and vote at any such meeting as shareholders, by themselves or proxies, shall be those persons who shall, for the time being, be in possession of and produce certificates or receipts declaring parties entitled to shares in any company, or acknowledging the receipt of a deposit in such company, usually termed "scrip" or "receipts" for deposits on shares; and that, notwithstanding the party in possession may not be the party to whom the same was originally granted, or that the same may not have been legally assigned to the party in possession, or notwithstanding the same may be possessed by the holder as a mere mortgagee, or in any other manner, or the same may be subject to any charge or lien, and which parties are, by this act, called "shareholders:" provided that nothing herein contained shall authorise more than one vote, either for dissolution or bankruptcy, to be given in respect of the same share, notwithstanding any transfer or delivery of such share after a vote shall have been given in respect thereof.

13. That every shareholder shall, in voting on the questions of dissolution and bankruptcy, be entitled to one vote, by himself or proxy, in respect of every share held by him, or in respect of which scrip or receipts may have been issued, or deposits paid; and that all shareholders producing such shares, scrip, or receipts shall be entitled to attend meetings and to appoint proxies according to the form contained in the Schedule hereto annexed, or in some form to the like effect: Provided always, and be it enacted, that the fact of any such party attending any such meeting shall not in anywise increase or alter, either in law or equity, his rights or liabilities.

14. That the appointment of any such proxy shall be signed by the party appointing the same before a Master or Master Extraordinary of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, or a justice of the peace in England or Ireland, or before a sheriff or sheriff-substitute, or justice of the peace in Scotland, or where such shares, scrip, or certificate shall be in possession of any parties beyond seas, the said proxy shall be signed as aforesaid before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls, or a notary public; and that, on signing the same, the share, scrip, or receipt in respect of which the proxy is intended to be appointed shall be produced to the Master, justice, sheriff, sheriff-substitute, consul, vice-consul, or notary public; and the number of the shares, or the number of shares referred to in such scrip or receipt, and the name of the company, shall be ascertained and verified, with the number and name of the company stated in the appointment of proxy, before such Master, sheriff, sheriff-substitute, justice, consul, vice-consul, or notary public.

15. That, to constitute a meeting under the provisions of this act for the purpose of deciding on a dissolution or bankruptcy, persons representing at least one third part of the shares in the undertaking actually issued or given, either as shares, scrip, or receipts, must be present and vote; and that, for the purpose of effecting a dissolution, and as to bankruptcy, there must be either a majority of the votes of the whole scrip of the company issued as aforesaid, or at least three-fifths of the votes of persons present and voting, either as shareholders or proxies, in favour of the motion for dissolution and for the bankruptcy, if so resolved on.

16. That the chairman at every such meeting shall sign a minute of the proceedings, and that every minute so signed shall be advertised within the shortest possible time in the same papers as those in which notice of the original meeting is hereinbefore required to be given; and a copy of the London Gazette containing the advertisement of such minute shall be evidence of the meeting having been duly called and held, and of the resolutions recorded having been duly passed by the majorities therein mentioned; and such minutes shall be countersigned by at least two of the three scrutineers aforesaid; and that any party signing minutes false or incomplete in any material particular, or any person who shall insert or cause to be inserted in the London Gazette any advertisement under the present clause, knowing the same to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour; and the minute directed to be advertised shall also be registered with the registrar of joint-stock companies, without any fee being chargeable for such registration.

17. That, as regards all projected railways as aforesaid, any portion of the intended line of which is situate in England or Wales, the meeting aforesaid may be held, as shall be specified in the notice calling the same, either in London or Westminster, or at the registered place of business of the company; or as regards any railways any portion of the intended line of which is situate in the counties of Lancaster or Chester, such meeting may be held at Manchester or Liverpool, notwithstanding that the registered place of business may not be at either of such places; or as regards any railways any portion of the intended line of which is situate in the county of York, such meeting may be held at York or Leeds, notwithstanding that the registered place of business may not be at either of such places; that, as regards railways situate in Ireland, the meetings may be held either in London or Dublin, or at the registered places of business, as shall be specified in the notice; and that, as regards railways situate in Scotland, the meetings may be held either in London or Edinburgh, or at the usual places of business, as shall be specified in the notice.

18. That no parties shall be entitled to vote, except in respect of scrip, receipts, or shares actually issued or given before the 31st day of March, 1846, and that the shares, scrip, or receipts actually issued or given, shall, for the purposes of this act, be taken to constitute the whole number of shares in the undertaking, although the contract may have provided that the undertaking shall consist of a greater number; and that, for the purpose of ascertaining the number of shares, scrip, or receipts actually issued or given, the committee of every projected railway company to which the powers given by this act apply, (except in regard to railways to be made in Scotland), shall, within twelve days after the passing of this act, be bound to send in unto the registrar of joint-stock companies a return in writing, under the hand of any member of such committee, specifying the number of shares, scrip, or receipts actually issued or given as aforesaid, the amount of each share, and of the deposit paid or to be paid thereon; and that, in case such return shall not be so sent in within the aforesaid period, every member of the committee shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, to be recovered in like manner as any penalty under the act intitled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies," is recoverable.

19. That the registrar of joint-stock companies shall, within six days from the passing of this act, send to the registered place of business of every such company a notice in writing, under his hand, requiring such return to be made; but the omission to send any such notice by the registrar shall not exempt the committee of any such company from the penalties aforesaid; and every person shall be at liberty to inspect any returns made to the registrar, under this act, on payment of a fee of 2*s.* 6*d.*; and the certificate of the said registrar, under his seal of office, as to the total amount of the shares, scrip, or receipts, shall be evidence as to the amount specified in such return, and for such certificate a fee of 2*s.* 6*d.* shall be paid; and no proceedings at any meeting shall be invalidated by reason of any defect or error in such return, but any party making such return knowing it to be false shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

20. That, in regard to projected companies for railways to be made in Scotland, the committee of every such company to which the powers given by this act apply, shall, within twelve days after the passing of this act, be bound to lodge with the sheriff clerk of the shire of Edinburgh a return in writing, under the hand of a quorum of such committee, or of every member thereof, specifying the number of shares, scrip, or receipts actually issued or given as aforesaid, the amount of each share, and the deposit paid or to be paid thereon; and that, in case such return shall not be lodged within the aforesaid period, every member of such committee shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, to be recovered by summary petition to the court of session at the instance of the said sheriff clerk.

21. That the said sheriff clerk shall, within six days after the passing of this act, cause to be published in the Edinburgh Gazette, and in two newspapers in common circulation in the city of Edinburgh, a notice by him requiring such returns to be made; and every person shall be at liberty to inspect any returns made to the sheriff clerk; and no proceeding at any meeting shall be invalidated by reason of defect or error in any such return; but any party making such return knowing it to be false shall be held to be guilty of falsehood and fraud, and shall be liable to prosecution and punishment accordingly; and the necessary expenses of the sheriff clerk, in regard to such returns and notices, shall be paid by the several committees making or bound to make returns, and shall be recovered in such amount from each of such committees as the sheriff of the shire of Edinburgh shall, by a writing under his hand, fix and determine.

22. Provided always, that if, by any reason whatever, such return of the number of shares, scrip, or receipts actually issued, shall not be made within one calendar month from the passing of this act, then a meeting may be called and held, under the provisions of this act, and may resolve on dissolution or bankruptcy, as by this act is provided, if persons representing shares, as before defined, equal to at least one-third part of the whole capital of the undertaking are present and vote; and any such meeting shall have the same powers as before conferred on a meeting representing one-third of the shares actually issued as aforesaid.

23. That, in addition to the question of dissolution, it shall be imperative on the meeting to decide whether such dissolution shall or shall not be taken to be an act of bankruptcy, for the purpose of having the affairs of the company wound up, under the provisions of the act after mentioned; but this provision shall not extend to the case of railways to be made in Scotland.

24. That, in case the meeting shall resolve that the affairs of the company shall not be so wound up, or in the case of a railway to be made in Scotland, if the majority shall resolve in favour of dissolution, then (subject to the power hereinafter given to the committee and to creditors of the company to petition for a fiat) the affairs of the said company shall be wound up, according to the rules applicable to the dissolution of partnership undertakings, and as if the undertaking had been dissolved by mutual consent.

25. Provided always, that the resolution to dissolve the company, or the actual dissolution thereof, shall not alter or affect the rights of creditors or other persons not being shareholders in the company, nor any engagements whatsoever which the committee may have entered into, and shall not affect any suits pending before the passing of this act.

26. That where any meeting called to consider the question of dissolution shall have determined the question of the dissolution of the company in the negative, no new meeting shall be called to consider the question of dissolution, or any matter relating thereto, until the lapse of six months from the day in which the question was last resolved in the negative.

27. That it shall be lawful for any three of those who were of the committee of any company so dissolved, at any time after the dissolution thereof shall have been resolved, or for any creditor or creditors of such company to such amount as is now by law requisite to support a fiat in bankruptcy in England and Ireland, or a sequestration in Scotland, within three months after the dissolution thereof shall have been resolved, to petition that a fiat in bankruptcy may issue against such company if in England or Ireland, or that the estates of the company may be sequestrated if in Scotland.

28. That, upon the production of a copy of the London Gazette containing the resolution of any such meeting as aforesaid, whereby it shall be resolved that the dissolution of the company shall be an act of bankruptcy, or upon the petition of any three of the committee as aforesaid, or of any creditor under the last preceding clause, a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such company by the registered name or style of such company; and the company shall thereupon be deemed to be within the provisions of an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 111], intitled "An Act for facilitating the winding-up of Joint-stock Companies unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements;" and of another act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 98], intitled "An Act to facilitate the winding-up of Joint-stock Companies in Ireland unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements," in all respects as if a fiat in bankruptcy had issued against it under the said act before its dissolution; but this last provision not to extend to Scotland.

29. That if the company be a company for making a railway or railways in Scotland, sequestration of the estates of such company shall be awarded on petition for sequestration in common form presented in name of any three of the committee, or of any creditor or creditors of such company to such amount and on such evidence of debt or debts of such creditor or creditors as is now by law requisite for obtaining sequestration of the estates of any company liable to sequestration, there being always produced along with the petition for sequestration a copy of the London or Edinburgh Gazette containing the resolution whereby the dissolution of the company shall have been resolved upon; and such sequestration, being so awarded, shall be followed out, in regard to the election of an interim factor and trustee and commissioners, and in regard to the proof and ranking of debts, the recovery and distribution of the estate, and all other matters necessary thereto, in the same manner and by the same course of procedure, as nearly as may be, as is by law provided in cases of sequestration of the estates of trading companies in Scotland: Provided always, that such sequestration shall not extend to or affect the estates of the individual partners of the company, nor preclude the rights or remedies otherwise competent by law to the creditors of such company against the individual partners thereof, or the estates of such individual partners.

30. That when any company for making any railway, actually incorporated before the passing of this act, shall have agreed to form any new or other railway, or an extension thereof, and in respect of which a new or further capital shall have been agreed to be raised or contributed, and shares as hereinbefore defined shall have been issued or otherwise appropriated, and deposits paid thereon, then such company or partnership (as regards the new undertaking) shall in all respects be considered as a company or undertaking within the provisions of this act; and meetings shall be held, and shareholders entitled to shares as aforesaid in the new undertaking shall in manner hereinbefore provided have power to dissolve such new undertaking, and to decide as to bankruptcy, in all respects as is provided with regard to the companies hereinbefore mentioned or defined.

31. That where the dissolution of a company shall have been resolved under this act, if judgment shall have been recovered, or shall afterwards be recovered, in any action against any member of the committee for any debt due from such company or from such committee in respect of the undertaking, the member against whom such judgment shall have been recovered shall be entitled at law to a contribution from each of the other members of such committee towards the payment of the monies recovered by such judgment, and of all costs and expenses in relation thereto, of such a share of the whole amount of such monies, costs, and expenses as would have been borne by such respective member upon an equal contribution by all the members of such committee, and may recover the contributions to which he may be so entitled, or any of them, by action or actions of debt or on the case against all or any of such other members of such committee, but so that no such member shall be liable in any such action as aforesaid for more than the share to which he shall respectively be liable to contribute under this provision.

32. That, after the dissolution of any company shall have been resolved under this act, no action or suit shall be brought for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for any business done for such company by any attorney or solicitor, whether in his character of attorney or solicitor, or as agent or otherwise, until the expiration of one calendar month after a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements, signed by the claimant, shall have been delivered to the committee or official assignee authorised to wind up the affairs of such company, or left at their or his place of business; and it shall be lawful for the Court of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, or any judge of either of such courts, and they are respectively hereby required, on the application of such committee, or of such official assignee, to refer such bill to be taxed and settled by any taxing officer of the court in which such reference shall be made; and the court or judge making such reference shall restrain the claimant from commencing any action or suit touching his demand, pending such reference, and such taxing officer may take such evidence in relation to such bill as he may think fit; and the costs of such reference shall be paid according to the event of such taxation, that is to say, if such bill, when taxed, be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, then the claimant shall pay such costs; and if the bill, when taxed, shall not be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, then the party on whose application the reference shall have been made shall pay such costs, to be considered and allowed nevertheless as part of the costs, charges, and expenses of executing the trusts and powers of this act; and every order to be made for such reference shall direct the officer to whom such reference shall be made to tax such costs of such reference to be so paid as aforesaid, and to certify what, upon such reference, shall be found to be due to or from such claimant in respect of such bill, and of the costs of such reference, and, after such reference as aforesaid, no further or other sum than shall be so found due shall be recoverable in respect of such bill.

33. That the following words and expressions shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or subject-matter; (videlicet),

The word "month" shall mean calendar month;
The word "person" shall include corporations.

34. That this act may be amended, altered, or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

PROSPECTUS.

This Society transacts all the usual business of Life Assurance. It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect Security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession) will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NEISON, Esq., F.L.S., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the Assurance of Young Lives. They embrace participating and non-participating Scales.

In the participating Class, the Assured will be entitled to have four-fifths of the Profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of Addition to the Amount assured, or in Diminution of Premium, as the Parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such Profits for Interest of Capital, or for a Guarantee Fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single Payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at 2 o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying, between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Offices of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information may be obtained.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 19, 1846.

ENGLISH lawyers have often been reproached, and, we must confess, not without reason, for their too exclusive study of their own legal system, and inattention to, or, it may almost be said, ignorance of the laws of other countries, and the general principles of jurisprudence. In this respect they are certainly far behind their continental and American brethren. For instance, the subject of international law has never been systematically treated of by any English writer, and, prior to the time of Lord Hardwicke and Lord Mansfield, was almost unknown in our courts. Nor until the recent establishment by the Middle Temple of the Lectureship on Jurisprudence and Civil Law has it apparently ever been regarded as forming a necessary part of the education of an English advocate. Lately, indeed, Mr. Burge, in his valuable Commentaries on Colonial and Foreign Law, has discussed many of its topics, but this only in connexion with the main object of his work. And it is remarkable, that, in a country possessing a colonial empire so extensive, and governed by so great a variety of laws, a work of even that character should have been so long wanting.

It will probably be new, therefore, to many of our readers, to discuss one of the first principles of international law, viz. that by which the force and obligation that ought to be given in any country to the laws of foreign states are to be determined. Its first and most general maxim or proposition is, that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory. And its laws affect and bind directly all property, whether real or personal, within its territory, and all persons who are resident within it, whether natural-born subjects or aliens, and also all contracts made and acts done within it*. Another maxim or proposition is, that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural-born subjects or others. This, indeed, is truly said, by the author above quoted, to be a natural consequence of the first proposition, for it would be wholly incompatible with the equality and exclusiveness of the sovereignty of all nations, that any one nation should be at liberty to regulate either persons or things not within its own territory. If nations had no intercourse with each other, and it did not happen that contracts, marriages, testaments, and successions to intestates' estates are common among persons belonging to countries whose laws are different and even opposite on the same subjects, there would be no occasion to seek for the third maxim or proposition, which is the foundation of international law. But, as this is not the case, and as, for instance, a contract, valid by the laws of the country where it is made, is often sought to be enforced in another country by the laws of which it is positively prohibited, or a marriage may be contracted in a country the laws of which require the parties to have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, which they have, but one of them is the subject of a country whose laws require the contracting parties to be of the age of twenty-five years, we are driven to seek for rules to govern such cases:—to determine, in the former instance, whether the contract can be enforced; in the latter, whether the marriage is valid, and, if so, whether only where it is celebrated, and not in the other country, or, generally, in all countries. We have therefore to inquire, what are the principles upon which the laws of one country have any force or obligation in another.

The continental jurists have attempted to find these

in the nature of the laws themselves. They have divided statutes (by which term is meant not the positive legislation which, with us, is known by that name, but the whole municipal law of the particular state) into three classes: personal, real, and mixed. "Personal statutes are those which have principally for their object the person, and treat only of property incidentally, such as those which regard birth, legitimacy, freedom, the right of instituting suits, majority as to age, incapacity to contract, to make a will, to plead in proper person, &c. Real statutes are those which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons except in relation to property; such as those which concern the disposition which one may make of his property, either while he is living or by testament. Mixed statutes are those which concern at once persons and property." Personal statutes were held by them to be of general obligation and force everywhere, and real statutes to have no extra-territorial force or obligation. Mixed statutes, though nominally forming a separate class, appear to have been dealt with according to the predominancy of the real or personal quality. But, in the application of this classification to particular cases, there has been much diversity of opinion even amongst those who have adopted it; and, notwithstanding their ability, they have failed in fixing any certain principles. Indeed, the doctrine that the real or personal quality of a law ought to determine whether it should have authority or not beyond the territory of the state to which it belongs, is probably more fanciful than sound. The maxim or proposition laid down by Huberus, in his Treatise De Conflictu Legum, and adopted by Mr. Justice Story, is, that, whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter, that is to say, upon its own proper jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent; but the difficulty is to ascertain by what principles this consent, express or tacit, is to be regulated. As to these, the axiom of Huberus is, that the rulers of every empire, from comity, admit that the laws of every people in force within its own limits ought to have the same force everywhere, so far as they do not prejudice the powers or rights of other governments, or of their citizens*. And this has been adopted by Mr. Justice Story in his excellent work, who says, "There is, then, not only no impropriety in the use of the phrase, 'Comity of nations,' but it is the most appropriate phrase to express the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation within the territories of another. It is derived altogether from the voluntary consent of the latter, and is inadmissible when it is contrary to its own policy or prejudicial to its interest."† It has, however, been objected to by some writers. They have thought that the term "comity" is not sufficiently expressive of the obligation of nations to give effect to foreign laws, when they are not prejudicial to their own rights and interests,—that it is too general and vague to be the foundation of a perfect right or compulsory law; and they have sought to rest the obligation upon a higher principle,—a paramount moral duty, which would, in certain cases, justify the use of physical force. This objection has been stated by Dr. Schœffner, in a work published in 1841, at Frankfort-on-the-Main, intitled "Entwicklung des Internationalen Privatrechts," (Development of Private International Law), and will probably become the subject of much discussion among jurists.

We have observed that the distinctions of the continental jurists as to the personality and reality of laws do not of themselves furnish a foundation for their force or obligation in foreign countries; but they may be useful guides in the exercise of the comitas gentium,—the voluntary consent,—if that be the real foundation; or in the ascertaining the dictates of the paramount moral duty, if that should be adopted. And in this way they have been used in a very learned work published at Paris in 1843, intitled "Traité du Droit International Privé, ou du Conflit des Lois des différentes Nations en Matière de Droit Privé:" by Dr. Félix. And, probably, in this point of view, the researches of the jurists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries will be found of the utmost value; and, in a matter which, whether we adopt the comity of nations or the paramount moral duty, seems incapable of being settled on certain principles, and to admit, in the application of its rules to particular cases, of great diversities of opinion, will furnish us with the best means of determining to what extent, and in what cases, the laws of a foreign country ought to be regarded.

In the application of these rules to particular cases of conflict of laws, there is much to interest legal minds; and, having thus adverted to the subject, we shall in some future Number prosecute it further.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—The judgment in the case of Lowe v. Steele (15 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 244) must have excited considerable surprise in the profession, because it, in effect, repeals a portion of an act of Parliament. The Law Amendment Act authorised the judges, from time to time, to make rules for alterations in the mode of pleading, &c., and such rules were to be laid before Parliament six weeks before they began to operate. Certain rules were accordingly made, and laid before Parliament for the time specified, after which they became part of the act of Parliament.

The 21st section of that act declares, that it shall be lawful for the defendant, in all personal actions, (except actions for assault, &c.), to pay into court a sum of money, by way of compensation or amends, in such manner and under such regulations, as to the payment of costs and the form of pleading, as the judges, or eight or more of them, shall, by any rules or orders by them to be from time to time made, order and direct. Under this section, the Reg. Gen., H. T., 4 Will. 4, were promulgated, and r. 17 prescribed the form of the plea of payment of money into court, which was to be as near as may be in the form there given, mutatis mutandis. Now that form, so far as concerns the subject of this letter, is on all fours with the one given by the Reg. Gen., T. T., 1 Vict. This latter form is copied, without an observation on the point in question, into all the books of practice and of pleading, and, being a statutory rule, ought, in my humble opinion, to have been upheld in the present case. We may, I think, reasonably infer that the collective wisdom of the judges in framing, and the Legislature in sanctioning this rule, have used terms sufficiently comprehensive to meet the objection made by Mr. Cowling in Lowe v. Steele. It is remarkable, moreover, that the late Mr. Chitty, who wrote early and fully on the statutes relating to pleading and practice, and all the other pleaders who have followed in his wake, have in no instance considered the plea insufficient for all purposes within its limits. The Chief Baron himself, on the first, and, I conceive, best impression, inquired, "Is not this plea good if it follows the form given by the rule of court? Those rules have the force of an act of Parliament." An observation more forcible and apposite could scarcely have been made. It was replied, that if this plea were allowed, the plaintiff would be without remedy for "interest." I think that proposition is not law, because the plaintiff might, I submit, have replied damages ultra, and if on the trial the plaintiff had proved interest to be due, he would have been entitled to a verdict as for substantial damages: if no interest were due, the averment in the plea, "that the defendant was not indebted in any greater amount," was true, and the plaintiff could not claim the shilling nominal damages, because the plea was a sufficient answer. If, in a plea of payment of money into court in an action of debt, the words "that the defendant never was indebted to the plaintiff to a greater amount," &c. are not deemed sufficient to cover damages for the detention of the debt, I would suggest that the general plea of nunquam indebitatus be altered by inserting the words "that the defendant never was indebted, nor has the plaintiff sustained damages, in manner and form" &c.; for, if the nunquam indebitatus in the general plea be a sufficient denial of damages for the detention of the debt, why should it not be so in the principal case? If the plaintiff fails to establish a debt, he fails in obtaining damages in the one case as in the other. Baron Alderson, indeed, says, "If the doctrine which Mr. Cowling contends for, is correct, the plea of nil debet was a bad plea, because it did not cover the damages." It is much to be regretted that the ingenuity of counsel should have been allowed to prevail against the common sense contained in this statutory form,—framed and approved of by so many learned judges,—written upon by a numerous class of practical lawyers,—and apparently prevailing against the first impression of the learned barons who decided the case.

* Lib. 1, tit. 3, De Conflictu Legum.

† Conflict of Laws, c. 2, s. 39.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. Justice Williams, on Monday last, after a very short illness. Sir John Williams was called to the Bar, 15th June, 1804; appointed King's Counsel, 1827; a Baron of Exchequer, 28th February, 1834; and a Justice of the Court of King's Bench, Easter Term, 1834.

WATSON'S TREATISE on the LAW of ARBITRATION and AWARDS; including the Act of Parliament relating to Arbitrations between Masters and Workmen; with an Appendix of Precedents.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane; Stevens & Norton, 26 and 39, Bell-yard; and Maxwell & Son, 32, Bell-yard, Lincoln's Inn.

Of whom may be had, recently published,

In 2 vols. royal 12mo., price 14. 18s. boards, the FIRST EDITION of GRANT'S CHANCERY PRACTICE, composed anew, and according to all the existing Operative Orders of Court, including the last of 8th May, 1845.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds. BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fitness of the Marginal Note.

"In nothing has Mr. Headlam been more successful than in the plan by which he has adapted the new Practice, occasioned by the New Orders of May, 1845, to the general Practice of the Court. He has in every case incorporated any of the New Orders by which the practice has been varied with the text of the original work, and he has given expositions of the effect, actual and probable, of those Orders, which exhibit much tact and professional acumen."—Law Mag., No. 7, N. PRINCIPLES OF the LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

PROSPECTUS.

This Society transacts all the usual business of Life Assurance. It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect Security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession) will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NELSON, Esq., F.L.S., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the Assurance of Young Lives. They embrace participating and non-participating Scales.

In the participating Class, the Assured will be entitled to have four-fifths of the Profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of Addition to the Amount assured, or in Diminution of Premium, as the Parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such Profits for Interest of Capital, or for a Guarantee Fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single Payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at 2 o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying, between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Offices of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information may be obtained.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 26, 1846.

OUR readers will not have failed to perceive, in our list of the acts passed during the late session, the important one which throws open the Court of Common Pleas to the Bar generally. That this measure will, in the language of its own preamble, "tend to the more equal distribution, and to the consequent dispatch, of business in the superior courts of common law at Westminster," there can be no doubt. Manifest would be the evils attending, in the present state of society, an arrangement by which only one class of counsel should be permitted to practise in any one particular court, and still greater are the evils, when the arrangement is applied to the business in banc only, of a court of common law.

It is always of importance to the solicitor to be able to keep his case throughout its various stages in the hands of the same counsel. We do not say that it must be always of advantage for him actually to do so; because cases may occur in which the talent of one man is of a kind peculiarly suited to a particular stage of a business, or a particular tribunal, and extremely unfitted for another stage of it, or another tribunal. But, speaking generally, a case is best carried through where the counsel who have advised and argued from the beginning, advise and argue till the end; at least, the suitor ought to have the right of determining for himself whether such a course is to his advantage; and nothing can be more preposterous, than to say to a suitor, whose cause is in the Common Pleas, that, unless he retains a serjeant for his counsel throughout, he must have no other continuity of counsel. The effect of the new regulation will, therefore, be beneficial in a twofold way. It will not only give to the suitor a larger class of advocates to select from, but it will enable him, when it is, in his opinion, his interest to do so, to continue his case throughout under the same guidance, so far at least as the private arrangements of the Bar, for their own convenience and the dispatch of business, do not interfere with such an arrangement.

The effect on the ancient order of Serjeants, it is not very difficult to foresee. In a few years, or, at least, when the present generation of Serjeants has passed away, Serjeants will have become historical, and their rank will merge in that of Queen's Counsel; for, when the only advantage, or supposed advantage, of the degree of Serjeant, that of exclusive audience in the Common Pleas, shall have been destroyed, there will be no conceivable inducement for a man to pay very heavy fees, for the mere pleasure of giving rings, and wearing a wig of special structure. The extinction, however, of this venerable order, as it is justly termed by Blackstone, since its existence is clearly traced back through nearly six centuries*, though it may cause a pang to

* Mr. Chitty, in his note to Blackstone, (vol. 1, p. 24, n. (t)), says, that the first mention he has met with in our law books of serjeants or counters, is in the Statute of Westminster 1, (3 Edw. 1, c. 29), and in Horn's Mirror, in the same reign. The statute, which is not printed, is so curious, as shewing what were the propensities, in that day, of even so honourable a body of men as serjeants, and what was the despotic discipline to which the Bar was subjected, that we cannot resist the temptation of transcribing it:—"Pourveu que si nul serjaunt, count (countre), ou autre face nule manere de deceit ou de collusion en la Court le Roi, ou consente de faire la en deceite de la court, et pur enginer la court ou la partie, et de ceo soit atteint; lors eit la prison d'un an et d'un jour et mes ne soit oie en la court a counter pur nuluy." The richness of the expression "pur enginer la court" is scarcely translatable. It is translated in the statute book by the words, "or to beguile the court." Happily, in the present day, it is not the practice of counsel to deceive the court, or to try to "engineer la court;" but we should be a little surprised at the committal of a serjeant to prison, even if he did attempt such an offence.

the mind of those who take keen delight in historical associations,—and such are ever of the finer order of minds,—ought not to be allowed to weigh against the obvious public benefit of entire freedom of selection for the suitor; and we are to remember, for the comfort and consolation of those even who would grieve over the departed glories of Serjeantry, as over the loss of an institution, that though, in truth, the order of Serjeants is connected with much that is most to be revered in the history of our jurisprudence; and though, to its still greater honour, that order has had to boast of many men who, in times of political difficulty and attacks made by privilege on the liberties of the subject, have been bold as well as able, in the cause of legitimate freedom; the men who have so adorned the order did so, not because they were Serjeants at law, but because they were good and great men; and last, if not least, be it remembered, that, if, as we predict, the recent act has struck the death-blow to the order of Serjeants, it was better that that honourable and venerable order should die decently under the stab of an act of the Legislature, than moulder away, as it threatened to do, in the humiliation of a forgotten old age.

2. That nothing hereinbefore contained shall apply to any railway constructed, or to be constructed, under the provisions of any present or future act containing any special enactment defining the gauge or gauges of such railway, or any part thereof, or to any railway which is in its whole length southward of the Great Western Railway, or to any railway in any of the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, or Somerset, for which any act has been or shall be passed in this session of Parliament, or to any railway in any of the last-mentioned counties now in the course of construction, or to the two railways severally to be constructed under the authority of two acts passed in this session of Parliament, [c. clxvi and c. cxxxv], severally intitled "An Act for making a Railway from the Great Western Railway at West Drayton to Uxbridge, in Middlesex," and "An Act for making a Railway from the Great Western Railway at Maidenhead, in Berkshire, to the town of High Wycombe, in the county of Buckingham;" or to so much of an act passed in this session, [c. cclxxviii], intitled "An Act to authorise certain Extensions of the Line of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway, and to amend the Act relating thereto," as authorises the construction of a branch railway from the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway to the town of Witney, in the county of Oxford; or to an act passed or which may be passed in this session of Parliament, "to authorise the construction of a railway from Melin-y-Manach to Rhydyddyd, in the county of Glamorgan."

4. That it shall not be lawful, after the passing of this act, to alter the gauge of any railway used for the conveyance of passengers.

5. 6. That if any railway, used for the conveyance of passengers, shall be constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, the company authorised to construct the railway, or, in the case of any demise or lease of such railway, the company for the time being having the control of the works of such railway, shall forfeit 10*l.* for every mile of such railway which shall be so unlawfully constructed or altered, during every day that the same shall continue so unlawfully constructed or altered; and, in estimating the amount of any such penalty, any distance less than one mile shall be estimated as a mile.

7. That, over and above the penalty hereinbefore provided, if any railway used for the conveyance of passengers shall be constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings, or for the lords of the committee of her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations, to abate and remove the same, or any part thereof so constructed or altered contrary to the provisions of this act, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition.

8. That all penalties under this act may be recovered from the company liable to pay and make good the same, as, under the provisions of an act passed in the last session of Parliament, [c. 20], intitled "An Act for consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorising the making of Railways," a penalty for any infringement of the last-recited act is recoverable against a company authorised to construct a railway.

PROSPECTUS.

This Society transacts all the usual business of Life Assurance. It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect Security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession) will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NISBET, Esq., F.L.S., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the Assurance of Young Lives. They embrace participating and non-participating Scales.

In the participating Class, the Assured will be entitled to have four-fifths of the Profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of Addition to the Amount assured, or in Diminution of Premium, as the Parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such Profits for Interest of Capital, or for a Guarantee Fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single Payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at 2 o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying, between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Offices of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisites information may be obtained.

Agricultural produce and farming stock (live and dead), and implements and utensils of husbandry, may be insured on one sum, without the average clause, at 3s. per cent. per annum free of duty.

In order to meet covenants requiring continuance of Rent, notwithstanding destruction of Buildings by Fire, the Society will grant Insurances on Rent, the amount being specified in the Policy.

Losses occasioned by Fire from Lightning will be made good. Insurances may be made for more years than one by a single payment; and in such cases a liberal Discount will be allowed on both Premium and Duty: for instance, Insurances effected for seven years will be charged the Premium and Duty for six years only.

LONDON, OCTOBER 3, 1846.

IN our last Number but one, we made some observations upon the subject of international law, and alluded to the doctrines which have prevailed among foreign jurists relative to the fundamental rule, by which the force and obligation to be given by one state to the laws of others are to be determined. We proceed to-day to redeem our promise, of prosecuting the subject further, and to give an example of the difficulty of applying those doctrines to particular cases. The case we have selected is not uncommon one of a conflict of the laws of different countries as to the period of minority. We have already adverted to the division made by foreign jurists of laws into personal and real. All laws which have for their principal object the regulation of the capacity, state, and condition of persons, have been treated by them generally as personal laws, and, for the most part, held to be of absolute obligation everywhere, when they have once attached upon the person by the law of his domicile. Now, it is agreed that the laws which regulate majority and minority are personal laws; and, therefore, according to this doctrine, "a person who has attained the age of majority by the law of his native domicile, is to be deemed everywhere the same—of age; and, on the other hand, a person who is in minority by the law of his native domicile, is to be deemed everywhere in the same state and condition." This is the doctrine ordinarily laid down by foreign jurists, and if, in the distinction between personal and real laws, they had discovered the true foundation of international law, the practice of nations ought to be in accordance with it. Suppose, therefore, that there are two countries, in one of which the age of majority is fixed at twenty-five, and in the other at twenty-one, and that a man born in the latter country, and having lived there until he is twenty-two years of age, comes into the former, and enters into a contract there. According to the rule above stated, he would be bound by it, though a citizen of the same age would not. Reverse the case, and suppose the contract to be made in the latter country by a man born in the former: can he plead his minority in the country of his birth against the contract being enforced? By the same rule, he may. And, upon general principles, it seems clear, that, if the law of the place of domicile is to prevail in one, it ought to prevail in both cases. When, however, we come to inquire what is the practice of nations, we find that a different rule has been adopted. They have held the contracts to be binding in both cases; in the one following the law of the domicile, in the other disregarding it. Upon what principle has this been done? Certainly not upon that of the personality or reality of laws. We must refer it to the axiom laid down by Huberus, mentioned in our former Number. In the words of Mr. Justice Story*, "Each nation may well adopt for itself such modifications of the general doctrine as it deems most convenient and most in harmony with its own institutions and interests and policy. It may suffer the same rule, as to the capacity, state, and condition of foreigners, to prevail within its own territory, as it may prevail in the place of their own native or acquired domicile; and it may at the same time refuse to allow any other rule than its own law to prevail within its own territory, in respect to the capacity, state, and condition of its own subjects, wherever they reside, at home or abroad. It may adopt a more limited doctrine, and recognise the law of the domicile, both as to foreigners and as to its own subjects, in respect to transactions and property in that domicile, whether native or acquired; and, at the same time, exclude any operation, except of its own law, as to the transactions and property either of foreigners or of its own subjects within its own territory. It may adopt the more general doctrine, and allow the rule of the actual domicile, as to capacity, state, and condition, to prevail under every variety of change of domicile; or, on the other hand, it may adhere to the stricter doctrine, that the domicile of birth shall exclusively furnish the rule to govern in all such matters. But whatever rules it may adopt, or whatever it may repudiate, will be alike the dictate of its own policy and sense of justice; and whatever it may allow or withhold will always be measured by its own opinion of the public convenience and benefit, or of the public prejudice and injury resulting therefrom." Acting upon this, the laws of England and America refuse to allow a foreigner, who enters into a contract there when of age at which, according to them, minority has ceased, to avoid it, by alleging that he was a minor and incompetent to contract according to the law of his own country. Their policy and sense of justice have led them to adopt the maxim, that every man is bound to know the laws of a country in which he enters into a contract, and to presume that he has contracted with reference to those laws. Whether, in this, they are right or wrong, no court has power to decide. There seems, however, good reason for thinking it to be right, as we shall see when we come to examine the laws as to marriage, so far as they are connected with the law as to majority and minority. Suppose the contract we have been speaking of to be a contract of marriage, is it binding or not? How far is the marriage valid? It is well known, that, by our law, a foreign marriage, valid according to the law of the place where celebrated, is good everywhere else. The contract is to be tried by the law of the place where it is made. If, by that, the parties are competent to contract, the marriage is valid, though, by the law of their domicile, they are incompetent. This is said to be by the consent of all nations, to prevent the mischief and confusion which would arise from a contrary doctrine. It has, on various occasions, been formally promulgated by our courts, especially by Lord Stowell in the well-known case of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, (2 Hagg. Constat. Rep. 54), and the doctrine recognised by our law as the rule of the jus gentium, in regard to contracts generally, and especially in regard to the contracts of marriage, is very different from that of foreign jurists; that laws which have for their principal object the regulation of the capacity, state, and condition of persons are of absolute obligation everywhere, when they have once attached upon the person by the law of his domicile. The principal instances of this have been contracts of marriage; but there have been cases in which, as to other contracts made by minors, a similar rule has prevailed. The American courts have adopted the same doctrine in relation to contracts generally, and especially marriage contracts, as appears from the cases cited by Mr. Justice Story in his valuable work. We have now not merely given an example of the difficulty of applying the doctrines of foreign jurists in the particular case of laws as to minority, but have shewn them to be inapplicable in that case. But, on the other hand, we may observe, that, in the doctrine which, by the laws of England and America at least, if not by those of other countries, appears to be recognised as the jus gentium in relation to contracts generally, and contracts of marriage especially, we can perceive no traces of the paramount moral duty which, as we have remarked, some writers appear inclined to contend for. No allusion is made to it by the learned and able man by whose decisions the doctrine has been illustrated and supported, but they have rested it upon the axiom of Haberuz, as more fully stated by Mr. Justice Story in the passage we have quoted.

- Sect. 1. An Action to be maintainable against any Person causing Death through Neglect, &c., notwithstanding the Death of the Person injured.

Whereas no action at law is now maintainable against a person who, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default, may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrongdoer in such case should be answerable in damages for the injury so caused by him: Be it therefore enacted, &c., that whosoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony.

2. That every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought; and the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided amongst the before-mentioned parties, in such shares as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, That not more than one action shall lie for and in respect of the same subject-matter of complaint; and that every such action shall be commenced within twelve calendar months after the death of the deceased person.

4. That in every such action the plaintiff on the record shall be required, together with the declaration, to deliver to the defendant or his attorney a full particular of the person or persons for whom and on whose behalf such action shall be brought, and of the nature of the claim in respect of which damages shall be sought to be recovered.

5. That the following words and expressions are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or by the nature of the subject-matter; that is to say, words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to a

Whereas sundry acts of Parliament have been passed from time to time for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts within certain towns, parishes, and places in England: and whereas, by an act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96), intituled "An Act to amend the Laws of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution," arrest upon final process in actions of debt not exceeding 20*l.* was abolished, except as to certain cases of fraud and other misconduct of the debtors therein mentioned: and whereas, by an act passed in the ninth year of the reign of her said Majesty, (8 & 9 Vict. c. 127), intituled "An Act for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts," further remedies were given to judgment creditors, in respect of debts not exceeding 20*l.*, for the discovery of the property of debtors, and punishment of frauds committed by them: and whereas, by the last-mentioned act, her Majesty is enabled, with the advice of her Privy Council, to extend the jurisdiction of certain courts of requests and other courts for the recovery of small debts to all debts and demands, and all damages arising out of any express or implied agreement, not exceeding 20*l.*, and also to enlarge and, in certain cases, to contract the district of such courts, and make certain other alterations in the practice of such courts, in manner in the now reciting act mentioned; and it is expedient that the provisions of such acts should be amended, and that one rule and manner of proceeding for the recovery of small debts and demands should prevail throughout England: and whereas the county court is a court of ancient jurisdiction, having cognizance of all pleas of personal actions to any amount, by virtue of a writ of justices issued in that behalf; and whereas the proceedings in the county court are dilatory and expensive, and it is expedient to alter and regulate the manner of proceeding in the said courts for the recovery of small debts and demands, and that the courts established under the recited acts of Parliament, or such of them as ought to be continued, should be holden after the passing of this act as branches of the county court, under the provisions of this act: and that power should be given to her Majesty to effect these changes at such times and in such manner as may be deemed expedient by her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council: be it enacted, &c., that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to order that this act shall be put in force in such county or counties as to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, from time to time shall seem fit; and this act shall extend to those counties concerning which any such order shall have been made, and not otherwise or elsewhere: Provided always, that no court shall be established under this act in the city of London.

2. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to divide the whole or part of any such county, including all counties of cities and counties of towns, cities, boroughs, towns, ports, and places, liberties and franchises therein contained, or thereunto adjoining, into districts, and to order that the county court shall be holden for the recovery of debts and demands under this act in each of such districts, and from time to time to alter such districts as to her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, shall seem fit, and to order from time to time that the number of districts in and for which the court shall be holden shall be increased, until the whole of such county shall be within the provisions of this act, and, with the advice aforesaid, to alter the place of holding any such court, or to order that the holding of any such court be discontinued, or to consolidate any two or more of such districts, and from time to time, with the advice aforesaid, to declare by what name and in what towns and places the county court shall be holden in each district; and, if it shall appear to her Majesty that any part of any county, liberty, city, borough, or district may conveniently be declared within the jurisdiction of the county court of an adjoining county, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to order that such part shall be taken to be within the jurisdiction of the county court holden for the purposes of this act for such adjoining county in and for such district as her Majesty shall order, in like manner as if it were part of such adjoining county.

3. That every court to be holden under this act shall have all the jurisdiction and powers of the county court for the recovery of debts and demands, as altered by this act, throughout the whole district for which it is holden, and there shall be a judge for each district to be created under this act, and the county court may be holden simultaneously in all or any of such districts; and every court holden under this act shall be a court of record.

4. That, for all purposes except those which shall be within the jurisdiction of the courts holden under this act, the county court shall be holden as if this act had not been passed; and all proceedings commenced in the county court of any county before the time when any court shall be holden under this act in such county may be continued, executed, and enforced against all persons liable thereunto, in the same manner as if they had been commenced under the authority of this act.

5. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that any court holden for the recovery of small debts or demands within the provisions of any act cited in either of the Schedules annexed to this act, and marked (A.) and (B.) respectively, shall be holden as a county court; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to assign a district to every such court, either greater or less than the district in which the court holden under the provisions of any such act now has jurisdiction, and to alter the place of holding any such court, or to order that any such court be abolished; and every such court shall continue to be holden under the act, according to which it is now constituted or regulated, until the time mentioned in any such order which shall be made with reference to such court; and, from and after the time mentioned in any such order, the act or acts under which such court is now constituted, so far as the same relate to the establishment or jurisdiction or practice of a court for the recovery of small debts or demands, shall be repealed, but not so as to revive any act thereby repealed; and such court so ordered to be holden as a county court shall thenceforth be holden as a county court under this act, and in all respects as if it had been originally constituted under the provisions of this act.

6. That, as soon as a court shall have been established in any district under this act, and also at the time mentioned in any such order which shall have been made as aforesaid for holding any of the courts mentioned in either of the said schedules as a county court under this act, the several provisions and enactments of the said acts of Parliament of the eighth and of the ninth year of the reign of her Majesty, and of every other act of Parliament heretofore passed, so far as the same respectively relate to or affect the jurisdiction and practice of the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, or give jurisdiction to any court, or to any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, with respect to judgments or orders obtained in the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, shall be repealed.

7. Provided always, that all proceedings in execution of the said acts, or any of them, commenced before the passing of this act, or before the days severally appointed for the alteration of the constitution of the said courts, shall be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if this act had not been passed, or as if the said courts had not been altered, and may be continued, executed, and enforced against all persons liable thereto, in the same manner as if they had been commenced under the authority of this act.

8. strict in which the cause of action arose; but no person shall be entitled to claim any compensation under this act by reason of any such surrender: Provided always, that the surrender of the right of holding any such court for the recovery of debts and demands shall not be deemed to infer the surrender or loss of any other franchise incident to the lordship of such hundred, honor, manor, or liberty, and that the court thereof may be held for all other purposes, if any, incident thereto, as now by law it may.

15. That the appointment of any person who at the passing of this act shall by any of the titles hereinbefore specified preside in or hold any court constituted or held under any of the acts cited in either of the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), to be the judge of any county court, shall not be deemed an appointment to hold a public office or employment within the meaning of an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. 23. That the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland shall appoint so many persons as they shall think fit to be treasurers of the courts holden under this act, and may remove any such treasurer, if they shall see occasion so to do, and appoint another person in his room; and every such treasurer shall be paid by salary in such manner and to such amount as the said commissioners from time to time shall order; and the salary of every such treasurer shall be paid out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: Provided always, that the person appointed or acting as treasurer before the passing of this act to any court holden under any act cited in either of the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), if not disqualified under this act, shall be entitled to be the first treasurer of the same court respectively, when holden as a county court under this act, in every case in which a separate treasurer shall be appointed exclusively for such court, and shall in such case continue to exercise his office, subject to the power of removal provided in this act.

27. That the clerk of each court, with such assistant clerks as aforesaid in cases requiring the same, shall issue all summonses, warrants, precepts, and writs of execution, and register all orders and judgments of the said court, and keep an account of all proceedings of the court, and shall take charge of and keep an account of all court fees and fines payable or paid into court, and of all monies paid into and out of court, and shall enter an account of all such fees, fines, and monies in a book belonging to the court, to be kept by him for that purpose, and shall from time to time, at such times as shall be directed by order of the court, submit his accounts to be audited or settled by the treasurer.

33. That the said high bailiffs, or one of them, shall attend every sitting of the court for such time as shall be required by the judge, unless when their absence shall be allowed for reasonable cause by the judge, and shall, by themselves or by the bailiffs appointed to assist them as aforesaid, serve all the summonses and orders, and execute all the warrants, precepts, and writs issued out of the court; and the said high bailiffs and bailiffs shall, in the execution of their duties, conform to all such general rules as shall be from time to time made for regulating the proceedings of the court, as hereinafter provided, and, subject thereunto, to the order and direction of the judge; and the said high bailiffs shall be entitled to receive all fees and sums of money allowed by this act in the name of fees payable to the bailiff, out of which they shall provide for the execution of the duties for which such fees are allowed, and for the payment of the bailiffs and officers appointed to assist them, according to such scale of remuneration as shall be from time to time approved by the judge; and every such high bailiff shall be responsible for all the acts and defaults of himself and of the bailiffs appointed to assist him, in like manner as the sheriff of any county in England is responsible for the acts and defaults of himself and his officers.

34. Provided always, that the persons holding the offices or performing the duties of clerks and high bailiffs in any court holden under any act cited in either of the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), on the 1st June in this year, and who shall continue respectively to hold the same offices or to perform the same duties at the time when such act shall be repealed under the provisions of this act, whether or not qualified as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled, if not disqualified under this act, to be the first clerks and high bailiffs of the same court, when holden as a county court under this act, and shall continue to execute their several offices, subject to the power of removal provided in this act, except that the clerks and high bailiffs already appointed to any court named in the said Schedule (A.) shall be removable only for such cause as would have warranted their removal under the acts according to which their court is now holden; and where, under the provisions of any of the said acts, more than one clerk was, on the said 1st June, and shall be, when such act shall be repealed, under the provisions of this act, acting in and for any of the said courts, or in and for any district or division of any court, the same persons shall jointly execute the office of clerk of the same courts as aforesaid, under such regulations as to the division of the duties and emoluments of the said office as shall be from time to time made by order of court, in case of difference between them: Provided always, that, if the clerk of any court cited in the said Schedule (A.) shall, within one calendar month next after the repeal of the act under which it is now holden, decline to accept the office of clerk to the same court as holden under this act, it shall be lawful to the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, if they shall think fit, to take into consideration the special circumstances of each case, and to award such compensation to be paid to such clerk as, under the circumstances, they shall think reasonable, in the manner herein provided in the case of persons whose emoluments will be diminished or taken away by this act.

35. And whereas the jurisdiction of the court of conscience in the city of Bristol, under the provisions of an act passed in the first year of the reign of her Majesty, and cited in the Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, extends to the recovery of debts and demands not exceeding 40*s.*; and the jurisdiction of the court of requests in the said city, under the provisions of an act passed in the fifty-sixth year of the reign of King George the Third, and also cited in the said Schedule (A.), extends to the recovery of debts and demands above 40*s.*, and not exceeding 15*l.*; be it enacted, that, in case the persons now holding the offices of registrar and clerk, and deputy registrar of the said court of conscience, shall continue to hold the same offices respectively when a court shall be established in the said city of Bristol under the provisions of this act, they shall be entitled to hold the office and execute the duties of clerks of any such court in all causes and matters relating to debts, claims, and demands not exceeding 40*s.*, under such regulations as to the division of the duties and emoluments of the said office as shall be from time to time made by order of court, in case of difference between them; and in case the person now holding the office of clerk of the said court of requests shall continue to hold the same office at the time when such court shall be established, he shall be entitled to hold the office and execute the duties of clerk of any such court in all causes and matters relating to debts, claims, and demands exceeding 40*s.*; and the said persons severally shall be removable only for such cause as would have warranted their removal under the several acts according to which the said courts are now holden.

36. That the treasurer, clerk, and high bailiff of every court holden under this act who may receive any monies in the execution of his duty shall give security, for such sum and in such manner and form as the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury from time to time shall order, for the due performance of their several offices, and for the due accounting for and payment of all monies received by them under this act, (or which they may become liable to pay for any misbehaviour in their office).

37. That there shall be payable on every proceeding in the courts holden under this act, to the judges, clerks, and high bailiffs of the several courts, such fees as are set down in the Schedule marked (D.) to this act annexed, or which shall be set down in any schedule of fees reduced or altered under the power hereinafter contained for that purpose, and none other; and a table of such fees shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court-house and in the clerk's office; and the fees on every proceeding shall be paid in the first instance by the plaintiff or party on whose behalf such proceeding is to be had, on or before such proceeding, and, in default, payment thereof shall be enforced by order of the judge by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the court can be recovered; and the fees upon executions shall be paid into court at the time of the issue of the warrant of execution, and shall be paid by the clerk of the court to the bailiff upon the return of the warrant of execution, and not before: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, with the consent of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to lessen the amount of the fees to be taken in the courts holden under this act in such manner as to him shall seem fit, and again to increase such fees, so that the scale of fees given in the schedule to this act be not in any case surpassed; and in every court holden under this act in which the fees allowed to be taken by the judges, clerks, or bailiffs of the court shall appear to be more than sufficient, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State to order that a certain part only of their fees shall be paid to them respectively, not exceeding, in the case of judges and clerks, the sums hereinafter mentioned as the greatest salaries to be by them respectively received; and in such case, and so long as such direction shall be in force, the amount of the residue of the fees shall be accounted for and paid to the treasurer of the court, and shall form part of the general fund of the court; but no such order shall be made to reduce the fees of any of the judges, clerks, and officers of any court mentioned in the said Schedule (A.) (so long as they shall be paid by fees) below the average amount of their fees or emoluments during the seven years next before the passing of this act, with a reasonable increase for any increase of business which they may severally have to perform by reason of this act.

38. That every person who is entitled to any franchise, right of appointment, or office, under any of the acts under which any court mentioned in the said Schedule (A.) is holden, and every person who shall have been entitled to any fees or salary for his services in the execution of any of the same acts, or for the issue of any writs to the sheriff out of the high Court of Chancery, and also every person who is entitled to any franchise or right of appointment to hold office in any court in any district in which the county court had not jurisdiction before the passing of this act, and in which district a court shall be established under the provisions of this act, and also every person holding any office in such last-mentioned court whose franchise or right of appointment or office shall be affected, abolished, or taken away, or whose emoluments shall be diminished or taken away under the operation of this act, shall be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within six calendar months after the passing of this act, or after the alteration of such court; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, in such manner as they shall think proper, to inquire what was the nature of the franchise or right of appointment, and what was the tenure of any such office, and what were the lawful fees and emoluments in respect of which such compensation should be allowed; and the commissioners in each case shall award such gross or yearly sum and for such time as they shall think just to be awarded upon consideration of the special circumstances of each case; and all such compensations shall be paid out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: Provided always, that if any person holding any office in any of the said courts shall be appointed after the passing of this act to any public office or employment, the payment of the compensation awarded to him under this act, so long as he shall continue to receive the salary or emoluments of such office or employment, shall be suspended if the amount of such salary or emoluments is greater than the amount of such compensation, or if not, shall be diminished by the amount of such salary or emoluments: Provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to entitle any person to compensation for the loss or diminution of the profits of any office to which he shall have been appointed under any act containing a provision, either that he is not to be entitled to compensation for the loss or diminution of the profits of his office, or that such act should cease on or within a limited time after the passing of any general act for the recovery of small debts, or under the provisions of either of the said acts of the eighth year of her Majesty and of the ninth year of her Majesty.

39. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that the judges, clerks, bailiffs, and officers of the courts holden under this act, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, or in any manner other than is provided by this act; and if her Majesty shall be pleased, with the advice aforesaid, to make such order, or to order that any such court shall be abolished, or that the district for which any such court is holden shall be consolidated with any other district, or if any act shall be passed whereby it shall be provided that the said courts, or any of them, shall be abolished, or otherwise constituted than is provided by this act, no such clerk or bailiff, nor any judge, county clerk, treasurer, or other officer of any such court, shall be entitled to any compensation on account of ceasing to hold his office, or to receive the fees allowed by this act, or on account of his emoluments being affected by such abolition or alteration, unless he shall have presided or acted as judge, assessor, county clerk, treasurer, clerk, bailiff, or other officer, before the passing of this act, in any of the courts mentioned in the Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, in which case he shall be entitled to compensation for the loss of his fees or emoluments, in like manner, and subject to the same regulations, as he would have been entitled thereto, under the provisions herein contained, in case he had been deprived of any fees or emoluments by reason of the passing of this act; and, in such case, all sums payable in the name of fees to such officers of the court as shall be paid by salaries shall be paid from time to time to the treasurer of the court, who shall pay the said several salaries out of the proceeds of such fees, and the surplus shall form part of the general fund of the court; and whenever the net amount of the fees shall not be sufficient to pay the said several salaries, the deficiency shall be made good and paid out of the consolidated fund of Great Britain and Ireland.

40. That the greatest salaries to be received in any case by the judges and clerks of the courts holden under this act shall be 1200*l.* by a judge and 600*l.* by a clerk, exclusive of all salaries to his clerks employed in the business of the court, and other expenses incidental to his office, unless in the case of any judge or clerk of any such court acting in the same capacity before the passing of this act in any court mentioned in the said Schedule (A.), whose salaries shall not be limited to any sum less than the average amount of the fees and emoluments of their respective offices during the seven years next before the passing of this act: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to allow in each case such sum as they shall in each case deem reasonable to defray travelling expenses, with reference to the size and circumstances of each district.

41. That the clerk of every court holden under this act, from time to time, as often as he shall be required so to do by the treasurer or judge of the court, and in such form as the treasurer or judge shall require, shall deliver to the treasurer a full account in writing of the fees received in that court, under the authority of this act, and a like account of all fines levied by the court, and of the expenses of levying the same, and shall pay over to the treasurer, quarterly or oftener in every year, by order of the court, the monies remaining in his hands over and above his own fees, and such balance as he shall be allowed, by order of the court, to retain for the current expenditure of the court.

42. That the treasurer of every court holden under this act shall from time to time, quarterly or oftener, as shall be directed by order of the court, audit and settle the accounts of the clerk and other officers of the court, and shall receive the balance of the various monies which such clerk and other officers shall have received under this act, and shall pay over to the judge of the court the amount of his fees, and make all such other payments as it shall be requisite to make thereout, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and shall from time to time pay the balance remaining in his hands, or so much thereof as he shall be directed to pay, into such bank, or otherwise, as shall be directed by the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

43. That the treasurer of every court holden under this act shall, once in every year, and oftener, if required, on such day as the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury from time to time shall appoint, render to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of Great Britain a true account, in writing, of all monies received and of all monies disbursed by him on account of every court holden under this act, of which he is treasurer, during the period comprised in such account, in such form, and with such particulars of receipt and disbursement, or otherwise, as the said commissioners of audit shall from time to time require.

44. That the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time make such rules as to them shall seem meet for securing the balances and other sums of money in the hands of any officers of every court holden under this act, and for the due accounting for and application of all such balances and other sums of money.

45. That the accounts to be kept by the several treasurers on account of the said courts shall be examined and audited by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts of Great Britain, under the powers vested in them under an act of the 25 Geo. 3, [c. 52], intituled "An Act for the better examining and auditing the Public Accounts of this Kingdom," and under any act now in force, or otherwise howsoever, except so far as the same are varied by this act.

49. Where common goals are inconvenient, prisons belonging to courts under acts cited in Schedules (A.) and (B.) may be used.

50. That the provisions of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, shall apply to the purchase of lands by the treasurer of any such court for the purposes of this act, except so much thereof as relates to the purchase and taking lands otherwise than by agreement; and in construing the said act the treasurer, acting with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, shall be deemed the promoter of the undertaking for which such lands are required.

51. Treasurer empowered to borrow money for the purposes of this act.

52. A general fund to be raised for paying off money borrowed.

53. That, as soon as the court shall have been established in any district under this act, all messuages, lands, and tenements, and all real estates and effects, vested in or belonging to the commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers of any of the courts mentioned in the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), which were holden in trust for the purposes of such court, shall vest in or belong to the treasurer of the county court for the time being, and his successors in the said office, in trust for the purposes of this act, for the like estate and interest, and subject to all the covenants, conditions, and agreements on which the same were respectively holden; and the said commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, and other officers, their heirs, executors, and administrators, shall be freed and discharged from all such covenants, conditions, and agreements, and from the consequences of their being unable to fulfil any covenants or agreements into which any of them may have lawfully entered in execution of the provisions of any of the said acts, on or before the repeal of such act, with respect to their estate and interest in such messuages, lands, tenements, real and personal estates and effects, in consequence of the vesting thereof in the said treasurer; and all monies and securities for money, and other property and effects of any kind whatsoever, in the hands of the commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers of any such court, shall be paid, transferred, and delivered to the said treasurer, or to such person as he shall appoint to receive the same, and shall be applied in discharging all claims and demands to which the same were liable in the hands of such commissioners, clerks, treasurers, trustees, or other officers, and the residue thereof

That it shall be lawful for the treasurer of the county court, with the approval of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and upon the certificate of the expediency thereof under the hand of the judge, to sell and dispose of all messuages, lands, and tenements which may be vested in him under the provisions of this act which shall not be needed for the purposes of this act, or which the treasurers shall think ought to be sold, for the purpose of better enabling him to discharge any just debts on account of any court of which the constitution shall be altered under this act, or to provide other and more convenient buildings for holding a county court; and the proceeds of all such sales, and also all monies and securities for money which shall be paid, transferred, or delivered to him on account of any such court as aforesaid, shall be applied towards discharging such debts; and in every case in which, at the time of the alteration of the constitution of the court, there shall be any just debts owing on account of any such court, or any salaries or annuities legally or equitably chargeable upon or payable out of the fees of such court, or out of any fund to which such fees are payable, over and above what may be discharged by the monies and effects so paid, transferred, or delivered to the treasurer on account of such court, and over and above the proceeds of the sale of any such messuages, lands, and tenements, in case the same or any part thereof shall be sold, such debts, salaries, and annuities shall be treated as if they were debts, which had been incurred for the purpose of providing a court-house for holding the county court for the district in which the place is included where such court was holden, and shall be liquidated out of the general fund hereinbefore mentioned, if the same shall be sufficient for that purpose, and any deficiency therein shall be paid out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

55. That the clerk of every court shall have the care of the court-house and offices of the court, and shall appoint and have power to dismiss the necessary servants for taking charge of such court-house and offices, at such salaries as shall be from time to time authorised by the judge, with the consent of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and the clerk of the court, under the direction of the said commissioners, and subject to such regulations as they may require to be enforced, shall make all necessary contracts or otherwise provide for repairing and furnishing, and for cleaning, lighting, and warming the said court-house and offices, and for supplying the said court and offices with law and office books and stationery, and for defraying all other necessary expenses not otherwise provided for incident to the holding of the said court; and the charge of the court-house and offices, and expenses thereby incurred, shall be paid out of the general fund of the court: Provided always, that the treasurer or clerk of any court, or the partner of any such treasurer or clerk, or any person in the service or employment of any such treasurer or clerk, shall not be directly or indirectly concerned or interested in any such contract, or in supplying any articles for the use of the said courts and offices: Provided also, that no payment for any such charge shall be allowed in the clerk's accounts until allowed under the hand of the judge.

56. That the judge of each district shall attend and hold the county court at each place where her Majesty shall have ordered that the county court shall be holden within his district at such times as he shall appoint for that purpose, so that a court shall be holden in every such place once at least in every calendar month, or such other interval as one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state shall in each case order; and notice of the days on which the court will be holden shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court-house and in the office of the clerk of the court, and no other notice thereof shall be needed; and whenever any day so appointed for holding the court shall be altered, notice of such intended alteration, and of the time when it will take effect, shall be put up in some conspicuous place in the court-house and in the clerk's office.

58. That all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.*, whether on balance of account or otherwise, may be holden in the county court, without writ; and all such actions brought in the said court shall be heard and determined in a summary way in a court constituted under this act, and according to the provisions of this act: Provided always, that the court shall not have cognisance of any action of ejectment, or in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question, or in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed, or for any malicious prosecution, or for any libel or slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, or breach of promise of marriage.

59. That, on the application of any person desirous to bring a suit under this act, the clerk of the court shall enter in a book to be kept for this purpose in his office a plaint in writing, stating the names and the last known places of abode of the parties, and the substance of the action intended to be brought, every one of which plaints shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which it shall be entered; and thereupon a summons, stating the substance of the action, and bearing the number of the plaint on the margin thereof, shall be issued under the seal of the court according to such form, and be served on the defendant so many days before the day on which the court shall be holden at which the cause is to be tried, as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, as hereinafter provided; and delivery of such summons to the defendant, or in such other manner as shall be specified in the rules of practice, shall be deemed good service; and no misnomer, or inaccurate description of any person or place in any such plaint or summons shall vitiate the same, so that the person or place be therein described as to be commonly known.

60. That such summons may issue in any district in which the defendant or one of the defendants shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of the action brought; or, by leave of the court for the district in which the defendant or one of the defendants shall have dwelt or carried on his business, at some time within six calendar months next before the time of the action brought, or in which the cause of action arose, such summons may issue in either of such last-mentioned courts.

61. That any summons or other process which under this act shall be required to be served out of the district of the court from which the same shall have issued may be served by the bailiff of any court holden under this act in any part of England, and such service shall be as valid as if the same had been made by the bailiff of the court out of which such summons or other process shall have issued within the jurisdiction of the court for which he acts.

62. That service of any summons or other process of the court which shall require to be served out of the district of the court may be proved by affidavit, purporting to be sworn before any judge of a county court, or before a Master Extraordinary in Chancery, or any person now authorised by law to take affidavits; and the fee for taking such affidavit shall not be more than 1*s.*, and shall be costs in the cause; and in every case of the unavoidable absence of the bailiff by whom any summons or other process of the court shall have been served, the service of such summons or other process may be proved, if the judge shall think fit, in the same manner as a summons served out of the district of the court, but without additional charge to either of the parties to the suit.

63. That it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action, for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said courts, but any plaintiff having cause of action for more than 20*l.*, for which a plaint might be entered under this act if not for more than 20*l.*, may abandon the excess, and thereupon the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover to an amount not exceeding 20*l.*; and the judgment of the court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly.

65. That the jurisdiction of the county court under this act shall extend to the recovery of any demand not exceeding the sum of 20*l.*, which is the whole or part of the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy, or of any legacy under a will.

66. That it shall be lawful for any executor or administrator to sue and be sued in any court holden under this act, in like manner as if he were a party in his own right and judgment, and execution shall be such as in the like case would be given or issued in any superior court.

67. That no privilege, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be allowed to any person to exempt him from the jurisdiction of any court holden under this act.

68. That where any plaintiff shall have any demand recoverable under this act against two or more persons jointly answerable, it shall be sufficient if any of such persons be served with process, and judgment may be obtained and execution issued against the person or persons so served, notwithstanding that others jointly liable may not have been served or sued, or may not be within the jurisdiction of the court; and every such person against whom judgment shall have been obtained under this act, and who shall have satisfied such judgment, shall be entitled to demand and recover, in the county court under this act, contribution from any other person jointly liable with him.

69. That the judge of the county court shall be the sole judge in all actions brought in the said court, and shall determine all questions, as well of fact as of law, unless a jury shall be summoned as hereinafter mentioned; and no suitors shall in any case be summoned to hold or have any jurisdiction in any court holden under this act.

70. That, in all actions where the amount claimed shall exceed 5*l.*, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to require a jury to be summoned to try the said action; and in all actions where the amount claimed shall not exceed 5*l.*, it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, on the application of either of the parties, to order that such action be tried by a jury; and in every case such jury shall be summoned according to the provisions hereinafter contained: 'Provided always, that the party requiring a jury to be summoned shall give to the clerk of the court, or leave at his office, such notice thereof as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, as hereinafter provided; and the said clerk shall cause notice of such demand of a jury, made either by the plaintiff or defendant, to be communicated to the other party to the said action, either by post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; but it shall not be necessary for either party to prove on the trial that such notice was communicated to the other party by the clerk.'

71. That every party requiring any jury to be summoned shall, at the time of giving the said notice, and before he shall be entitled to have such jury summoned, pay to the clerk of the court the sum of 5*s.* for payment of the jury, and such sum shall be considered as costs in the cause, unless otherwise ordered by the judge.

72. That the sheriff of every county, and the high bailiffs of Westminster and Southwark, shall cause to be delivered to the clerk of the court a list of persons qualified and liable to serve as jurors in the courts of assize and nisi prius for their county, city, and borough respectively, within fourteen days from the receipt of the jury book from the clerk of the peace of the county or other officer, each list containing only the names of persons residing within the jurisdiction of the court, for which list the said sheriffs and high bailiffs shall be entitled to receive out of the general fund of the court a fee, after the rate of 3*d.* for every folio of seventy-two words; and whenever a jury shall be required, the clerk of the court shall cause so many of the persons named in the list as shall be needed, in the opinion of the judge, to be summoned to attend the court at a time and place to be mentioned in the summons, and shall administer or cause to be administered to each of them an oath shall be

73. That, whenever there are any jury trials, five jurymen shall be impanelled and sworn, as occasion shall require, to give their verdicts in the causes which shall be brought before them in the said court, and being once sworn shall not need to be re-sworn in each trial; and either of the parties to any such cause shall be entitled to his lawful challenge against all or any of the said jurors, in like manner as he would be entitled in any superior court; and the jurymen so sworn shall be required to give an unanimous verdict.

74. That, on the day in that behalf named in the summons, the plaintiff shall appear, and thereupon the defendant shall be required to appear to answer such plaint; and, on answer being made in court, the judge shall proceed in a summary way to try the cause, and give judgment, without further pleading or formal joinder of issue.

75. That no evidence shall be given by the plaintiff, on the trial of any such cause as aforesaid, of any demand or cause of action, except such as shall be stated in the summons hereby directed to be issued.

76. That no defendant, in any court holden under this act, shall be allowed to set off any debt or demand claimed or recoverable by him from the plaintiff, or to set up by way of defence and to claim and have the benefit of infancy, coverture, or any statute of limitations, or of his discharge under any statute relating to bankrupts, or any act for relief of insolvent debtors, without the consent of the plaintiff, unless such notice thereof, as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, shall have been given to the clerk of the court; and, in every case in which the practice of the court shall require such notice to be given, the clerk of the court shall, as soon as conveniently may be after receiving such notice, communicate the same to the plaintiff by the post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; but it shall not be necessary for the defendant to prove on the trial that such notice was communicated to the plaintiff by the clerk.

77. That the judge may in any case, with the consent of both parties to the suit, order the same, with or without other matters within the jurisdiction of the court in dispute between such parties, to be referred to arbitration, to such person or persons, and in such manner, and on such terms as he shall think reasonable and just; and such reference shall not be revocable by either party, except by consent of the judge; and the award of the arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire shall be entered as the judgment in the cause, and shall be as binding and effectual, to all intents, as if given by the judge; provided that the judge may, if he think fit, on application to him at the first court held after the expiration of one week after the entry of such award, set aside any such award so given as aforesaid, or may, with the consent of both parties aforesaid, revoke the reference, or order another reference to be made in the manner aforesaid.

78. That five of the judges of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, including the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, or one of the said chiefs at the least, shall have power to make and issue all the general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the county courts holden under this act, and also to frame forms for every proceeding in the said courts for which they shall think it necessary that a form be provided; and also for keeping all books, entries, and accounts to be kept by the clerks of the said courts, and from time to time to alter any such rule or form; and the rules so made, and the forms so framed, shall be observed and used in all the courts holden under this act; and in any case not expressly provided for herein, or by the said rules, the general principles of practice in the superior courts of common law may be adopted and applied, at the discretion of the judges, to actions and proceedings in their several courts.

79. That if, upon the day of the return of any summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the said court, or of the cause for which the said summons shall have been issued, the plaintiff shall not appear, the cause shall be struck out; and if he shall appear, but shall not make proof of his demand to the satisfaction of the court, it shall be lawful for the judge to nonsuit the plaintiff, or to give judgment for the defendant, and, in either case, where the defendant shall appear and shall not admit the demand, to award to the defendant, by way of costs and satisfaction for his trouble and attendance, such sum as the judge in his discretion shall think fit, and such sum shall be recoverable from the plaintiff by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the same court can be recovered: Provided always, that, if the plaintiff shall not appear when called upon, and the defendant, or some one duly authorised on his behalf, shall appear, and admit the cause of action to the full amount claimed, and pay the fees payable in the first instance by the plaintiff, the court, if it shall think fit, may proceed to give judgment, as if the plaintiff had appeared.

80. That if, on the day so named in the summons, or at any continuation or adjournment of the court or cause in which the summons was issued, the defendant shall not appear, or sufficiently excuse his absence, or shall neglect to answer when called in court, the judge, upon due proof of service of the summons, may proceed to the hearing or trial of the cause on the part of the plaintiff only, and the judgment thereupon shall be as valid as if both parties had attended: Provided always, that the judge in any such case, at the same or any subsequent court, may set aside any judgment so given in the absence of the defendant, and the execution thereupon, and may grant a new trial of the cause, upon such terms, if any, as to payment of costs, giving security for debt or costs, or such other terms as he may think fit, on sufficient cause shewn to him for that purpose.

81. That the judge may in any case make orders for granting time to the plaintiff or defendant to proceed in the prosecution or defence of the suit, and also may from time to time adjourn any court, or the hearing or further hearing of any cause, in such manner as to the judge may seem fit.

82. That it shall be lawful for the defendant in any action brought under this act, within such time as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the court, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think a full satisfaction for the demand of the plaintiff, together with the costs incurred by the plaintiff up to the time of such payment; and notice of such payment shall be communicated by the clerk of the court to the plaintiff by post, or by causing the same to be delivered at his usual place of abode or business; and the said sum of money shall be paid to the plaintiff; but, if he shall elect to proceed, and if the plaintiff shall recover no further sum in the action than shall have been so paid into court, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant the costs incurred by him in the said action after such payment; and such costs shall be settled by the court, and an order shall thereupon be made by the court for the payment of such costs by the plaintiff.

83. That, on the hearing or trial of any action, or on any other proceeding under this act, the parties thereto, their wives and all other persons, may be examined, either on behalf of the plaintiff or defendant, upon oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases in which persons are by law allowed to make affirmation instead of taking an oath, to be administered by the proper officer of the court.

84. That every person who in any examination upon oath or solemn affirmation before any judge of the county court shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

85. That either of the parties to the suit or any other proceeding under this act may obtain, at the office of the clerk of the court, summonses to witnesses, to be served by one of the bailiffs of the court, with or without a clause requiring the production of books, deeds, papers, and writings in their possession sion or control, and in any such summons any number of names may be inserted.

86. That every person on whom any such summons shall have been served, either personally or in such other manner as shall be directed by the general rules or practice of the courts, and to whom, at the same time, payment or a tender of payment of his expenses shall have been made on such scale of allowance as shall be from time to time settled by the general rules of practice of the court, and who shall refuse or neglect, without sufficient cause, to appear, or to produce any books, papers, or writings required by such summons to be produced, and also every person present in court who shall be required to give evidence, and who shall refuse to be sworn and give evidence, shall forfeit and pay such fine, not exceeding 10*l.*, as the judge shall set on him; and the whole or any part of such fine, in the discretion of the judge, after deducting the costs, shall be applicable towards indemnifying the party injured by such refusal or neglect, and the remainder thereof shall form part of the general fund of the court in which the fine was imposed.

87. That payment of any fine imposed by any court under the authority of this act may be enforced upon the order of the judge in like manner as payment of any debt adjudged in the said court, and shall be accounted for as herein provided.

88. That all costs of any action or proceeding in the court, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be paid by or apportioned between the parties in such manner as the judge shall think fit, and, in default of any special direction, shall abide the event of the action, and execution may issue for the recovery of any such costs in like manner as for any debt adjudged in the said court.

89. That every order and judgment of any court holden under this act, except as herein provided, shall be final and conclusive between the parties, but the judge shall have power to nonsuit the plaintiff in every case in which satisfactory proof shall not be given to him entitling either the plaintiff or defendant to the judgment of the court, and shall also, in every case whatever, have the power, if he shall think fit, to order a new trial to be had on such terms as he shall think reasonable, and in the meantime to stay the proceedings.

90. That no plaint entered in any court holden under this act shall be removed or removable from the said court into any of her Majesty's superior courts of record by any writ or process, unless the debt or damage claimed shall exceed 5*l.*, and then only by leave of a judge of one of the said superior courts, in cases which shall appear to the judge fit to be tried in one of the superior courts, and upon such terms as to payment of costs, giving security for debt or costs, or such other terms as he shall think fit.

91. That no person shall be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or a barrister at law instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party; but no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, shall be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under this act; and no person, not being an attorney admitted to one of her Majesty's superior courts of record, shall be entitled to have or recover any sum of money for appearing or acting on behalf of any other person in the said court; and no attorney shall be entitled to have or recover therefor any sum of money, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than 40*s.*, or to have or recover more than 10*s.* for his fees and costs, unless the debt or damage claimed shall be more than 5*l.*, or more than 15*s.* in any case within the summary jurisdiction given by this act; and in no case shall any fee exceeding 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* be allowed for employing a barrister as counsel in the cause; and the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney, either by plaintiff or defendant, shall not be allowed on taxation of costs in the case of a plaintiff where less than 5*l.* is recovered, or in the case of a defendant where less than 5*l.* is claimed, or in any case unless by order of the judge.

92. That the judge may make orders concerning the time or times and by what instalments any debt or damages or costs for which judgment shall be obtained in the said court shall be paid, and all such monies shall be paid into court, unless the judge shall otherwise direct.

93. That if there shall be cross judgments between the parties, execution shall be taken out by that party only who shall have obtained judgment for the larger sum, and for so much only as shall remain after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the remainder shall be entered, as well as satisfaction on the judgment for the smaller sum, and if both sums shall be equal, satisfaction shall be entered upon both judgments.

94. That whenever the judge shall have made an order for the payment of money, the amount shall be recoverable, in case of default or failure of payment thereof forthwith, or at the time or times and in the manner thereby directed, by execution against the goods and chattels of the party against whom such order shall be made; and the clerk of the said court, at the request of the party prosecuting such order, shall issue under the seal of the court a writ of fieri facias as a warrant of execution to the high bailiff of the court, who by such warrant shall be empowered to levy, or cause to be levied, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such party, such sum of money as shall be so ordered, wheresoever they may be found within the district of the court, whether within liberties or without, and also the costs of the execution; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such warrant.

95. That if the judge shall have made any order for payment of any sum of money by instalments, execution upon such order shall not issue against the party until after default in payment of some instalment according to such order, and execution or successive executions may then issue for the whole of the said sum of money and costs then remaining unpaid, or for such portion thereof as the judge shall order, either at the time of making the original order, or at any subsequent time, under the seal of the court.

96. That every bailiff or officer executing any process of execution issuing out of the said county court against the goods and chattels of any person, may by virtue thereof seize any of the goods and chattels of such person, (excepting the wearing apparel and bedding of such person or his family, and the tools and implements of his trade to the value of 5*l.*, which shall to that extent be protected from such seizure), and may also seize and take any money or bank notes, (whether of the Bank of England or of any other bank), and any cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or securities for money, belonging to any such person against whom any such execution shall have issued as aforesaid.

97. That the high bailiff shall hold any cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or other securities for money which shall have been so seized or taken as aforesaid, as a security or securities for the amount directed to be levied by such execution, or so much thereof as shall not have been otherwise levied or raised for the benefit of the plaintiff; and the plaintiff may sue in the name of the defendant, or in the name of any person in whose name the defendant might have sued, for the recovery of the sum or sums secured or made payable thereby, when the time of payment thereof shall have arrived.

98. That it shall be lawful for any party who has obtained any unsatisfied judgment or order in any court held by virtue of this act, or under any act repealed by this act, for the payment of any debt or damages or costs, to obtain a summons from any county court within the limits of which any other party shall then dwell or carry on his business, such summons to be in such form as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the county courts as herein provided, and to be served personally upon the person to whom it is directed, requiring him to appear at such a time as shall be directed by the said rules to answer such things as are named in such summons; and if he shall appear in pursuance of such summons, he may be examined upon oath touching his estate and effects, and the manner and circumstances under which he contracted the debt or incurred the damages or liability which is the subject of the action in which judgment has been obtained against him; and as to the means and expectation he then had, and as to the property and means he still hath, of discharging the said debt or damages or liability, and as to the disposal he may have made of any property; and the person obtaining such summons as aforesaid, and all other witnesses whom the judge shall think requisite, may be examined upon oath touching the inquiries authorised to be made as aforesaid; and the costs of such summons and of all the proceedings thereon shall be deemed costs in the cause.

99. That if a party so summoned shall not attend as required by such summons, and shall not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending, or shall, if attending, refuse to be sworn, or to disclose any of the things aforesaid, or if he shall not make answer touching the same to the satisfaction of such judge, or if it shall appear to such judge, either by the examination of the party or by any other evidence, that such party, if a defendant, in incurring the debt or liability which is the subject of the action in which judgment has been obtained, has obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences, or by means of fraud or breach of trust, or has wilfully contracted such debt or liability without having had at the same time a reasonable expectation of being able to pay or discharge the same, or shall have made or caused to be made any gift, delivery, or transfer of any property, or shall have charged, removed, or concealed the same, with intent to defraud his creditors or any of them, or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the said court that the party so summoned has then, or has had since the judgment obtained against him, sufficient means and ability to pay the debt or damages or costs so recovered against him, either altogether, or by any instalment or instalments which the court in which the judgment was obtained shall have ordered, and if he shall refuse or neglect to pay the same as shall have been so ordered, or as shall be ordered pursuant to the power hereinafter provided, it shall be lawful for such judge, if he shall think fit, to order that any such party may be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of the county, district, or place in which the party summoned is resident, or to any prison which shall be provided as the prison of the court, for any period not exceeding forty days.

100. That it shall be lawful for the judge of any court before whom such summons shall be heard, if he shall think fit, whether or not he shall make any order for the committal of the defendant, to rescind or alter any order that shall have been previously made against any defendant so summoned before him for the payment, by instalments or otherwise, of any debt or damages recovered, and to make any further or other order, either for the payment of the whole of such debt or damages and costs forthwith, or by any instalments, or in any other manner as such judge may think reasonable and just.

101. That in every case where the defendant in any suit brought in any county court shall have been personally served with the summons to appear, or shall personally appear at the trial of the same, the judge, at the hearing of the cause, or at any adjournment thereof if judgment shall be given against the defendant, shall have the same power and authority of examining the defendant and the plaintiff and other parties touching the several things hereinbefore mentioned, and of committing the defendant to prison, and of making an order, as he might have and exercise under the provisions hereinbefore contained in case the plaintiff had obtained a summons for that purpose after the judgment obtained as hereinbefore mentioned.

102. That, whenever any order of commitment shall have been made as aforesaid, the clerk of the said court shall issue under the seal of the court a warrant of commitment, directed to one of the bailiffs of any county court, who by such warrant shall be empowered to take the body of the person against whom such order shall be made; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such warrant; and the gaoler or keeper of every gaol, house of correction, and prison mentioned in any such order shall be bound to receive and keep the defendant therein until discharged under the provisions of this act, or otherwise by due course of law; and no protection, order, or certificate granted by any court of bankruptcy, or for the relief of insolvent debtors, shall be available to discharge any defendant from any commitment under such last-mentioned order.

103. That no imprisonment under this act shall in anywise operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the debt or other cause of action on which a judgment has been obtained, or protect the defendant from being anew summoned and imprisoned or any new fraud or other default rendering him liable to be imprisoned under this act, or deprive the plaintiff of any right to take out execution against the goods and chattels of the defendant, in the same manner as if such imprisonment had not taken place.

104. That in all cases where a warrant of execution shall have issued against the goods and chattels of any party, or an order for his commitment shall have been made under this act, and such party, or his goods and chattels, shall be out of the jurisdiction of the court, it shall be lawful for the high bailiff of the court to send such warrant of execution or of commitment to the clerk of any other court constituted under this act, within the jurisdiction of which such party, or his goods and chattels, shall then be or be believed to be, with a warrant thereto annexed, under the hand of the high bailiff and seal of the court from which the original warrant issued, requiring execution of the same, and the clerk of the court to which the same shall be sent shall seal or stamp the same with the seal of his court, and issue the same to the high bailiff of his court, and thereupon such last-mentioned high bailiff shall be authorised and required to act in all respects as if the original warrant of execution or commitment had been directed to him by the court of which he is the high bailiff, and shall, within such time as shall be specified in the rules of practice, return to the high bailiff of the court from which the same originally issued, what he shall have done in the execution of such process, and in case a levy shall have been made shall, within such time as shall be specified in the rules of practice, pay over all monies received in pursuance of the warrant to the high bailiff of the court from which the same shall have originally issued, retaining the fees for execution of the process; and where any order of commitment shall have been made, and the person apprehended, he shall be forthwith conveyed, in custody of the bailiff or officer apprehending him, to the gaol or house of correction or other prison of the court within the jurisdiction of which he shall have been apprehended, and kept therein for the time mentioned in the warrant of commitment, unless sooner discharged under the provisions of this act; and all constables and other peace officers shall be aiding and assisting within their respective districts in the execution of such warrant.

105. That if it shall at any time appear to the satisfaction of the judge, by the oath or affirmation of any person, or otherwise, that any defendant is unable, from sickness or other sufficient cause, to pay and discharge the debt or damages recovered against him, or any instalment thereof ordered to be paid as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, to suspend or stay any judgment, order, or execution given, made, or issued in such action, for such time and on such terms as the judge shall think fit, and so from time to time until it shall appear, by the like proof as aforesaid, that such temporary cause of disability has ceased.

106. That no sale of any goods which shall be taken in execution as aforesaid shall be until after the end of five days at least next following the day on which such goods shall have been so taken, unless such goods be of a perishable nature, or upon the request in writing of the party whose goods shall have been taken; and, until such sale, the goods shall be deposited by the bailiff in some fit place, or they may remain in the custody of a fit person approved by the high bailiff, to be put in possession by the bailiff; and it shall be lawful for the high bailiff, from time to time, as he shall think proper, to appoint such and so many persons for keeping possession, and so many sworn brokers and appraisers for the purpose of selling or valuing any goods, chattels, or effects taken in execution under this act, as shall appear to him to be necessary, and to direct security to be taken from each of them, for such sum and in such manner as he shall think fit, for the faithful performance of their duties without injury or oppression; and the judge or high bailiff may dismiss any person, broker, or appraiser so appointed; and no goods taken in execution under this act shall be sold for the purpose of satisfying the warrant of execution except by one of the brokers or appraisers so appointed; and the brokers or appraisers so appointed shall be entitled to have, out of the produce of the goods so distrained or sold, 6d. in the pound on the value of the goods for the appraisement thereof, whether by one broker or more, over and above the stamp duty, and for advertisements, catalogues, sale and commission, and delivery of goods, 1s. in the pound on the net produce of the sale.

107. That so much of an act passed in the eighth year of the reign of Queen Anne, [c. 17], intitled "An Act for the better Security of Rents, and to prevent Frauds committed by Tenants," as relates to the liability of goods taken by virtue of any execution, shall not be deemed to apply to goods taken in execution under the process of any court holden under this act; but the landlord of any tenement in which any such goods shall be so taken shall be entitled, by any writing under his hand, or under the hand of his agent, to be delivered to the bailiff or officer making the levy, which writing shall state the terms of holding and the rent payable for the same, to claim any rent in arrear then due to him, not exceeding the rent of four weeks where the tenement is let by the week, and not exceeding the rent accruing due in two terms of payment where the tenement is let for any other term less than a year, and not exceeding in any case the rent accruing due in one year; and, in case of any such claim being so made, the bailiff or officer making the levy shall distrain as well for the amount of the rent so claimed, and the costs of such additional distress, as for the amount of money and costs for which the warrant of execution issued under this act, and shall not proceed to sell the same or any part thereof within five days next after such distress taken; and if any replevin be made of the goods so taken, such of the goods shall be sold under the execution as shall satisfy the money and costs for which the warrant of execution issued, and the costs of the sale; and the overplus of such sale (if any), and also the residue of the goods, shall be returned as in other cases of distress for rent, and replevin thereof; and for every such additional distress for rent in arrear, the high bailiff of the court shall be entitled to have, as the costs of the distress, instead of the fees allowed by this act for making such distress, and keeping possession thereof, the fees allowed by an act passed in the fifty-seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, [c. 93], intitled "An Act to regulate the Costs of Distresses levied for Payment of small Rents."

108. That no judgment or execution shall be stayed, delayed, or reversed upon or by any writ of error, or supersedeas thereon, to be sued for the reversing of any judgment given in any court holden under the provisions of this act.

109. That, in or upon every warrant of execution issued against the goods and chattels of any person whomsoever, the clerk of the court shall cause to be inserted or indorsed the sum of money and costs adjudged, with the sums allowed by this act as increased costs for the execution of such warrant; and if the party against whom such execution shall be issued, shall, before an actual sale of the goods and chattels, pay or cause to be paid or tendered unto the clerk of the court out of which such warrant of execution has issued, or to the bailiff holding the warrant of execution, such sum of money and costs as aforesaid, or such part thereof as the person entitled thereto shall agree to accept in full of his debt or damages and costs, together with the fees herein directed to be paid, the execution shall be superseded, and the goods and chattels of the said party shall be discharged and set at liberty.

110. That any person imprisoned under this act who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand, or the instalments thereof payable, and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment being made, together with the costs of obtaining such order, and all subsequent costs, shall be discharged out of custody, upon the certificate of such payment or satisfaction, signed by the clerk of the court, by leave of the judge of the court in which the order of imprisonment was made.

111. That the clerk of every court holden under this act shall cause a note of all plaints and summonses, and of all orders, and of all judgments and executions, and returns thereto, and of all fines, and of all other proceedings of the court, to be fairly entered from time to time in a book belonging to the court, which shall be kept at the office of the court; and such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court, and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court, shall at all times be admitted, in all courts and places whatsoever, as evidence of such entries, and of the proceedings referred to by such entry or entries, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof.

112. That the clerks of every such court shall in the month of March in each year make out a correct list of all sums of money belonging to suitors in the court which shall have been paid into court, and which shall have remained unclaimed for five years before the first day of the month of January then last past, specifying the names of the parties for whom or on whose account the same were so paid into court; and a copy of such list shall be put up, and remain during court hours in some conspicuous part of the court-house, and at all times in the clerk's office, and all sums of money which shall have been paid into any such court, to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, and which shall have remained unclaimed for the period of six years before the passing of this act, and which are now in the hands of any commissioner, trustee, judge, or officer of such court, or otherwise held in trust for such suitors, and all further sums of money which shall hereafter be paid into any such court, to the use of any suitor or suitors thereof, shall, if unclaimed for the period of six years after the same shall have been so paid into court, be applicable as part of the general fund of the court, and shall be carried to the account of such fund, and no person shall be entitled to claim any sum which shall have remained unclaimed for six years; but no time during which the person entitled to claim such sum shall have been an infant or feme covert, or of unsound mind, or beyond the seas, shall be taken into account in estimating the said period of six years.

113. That if any person shall wilfully insult the judge or any juror, or any bailiff, clerk, or officer of the said court, for the time being, during his sitting or attendance in court, or in going to or returning from the court, or shall wilfully interrupt the proceedings of the court, or otherwise misbehave in court, it shall be lawful for any bailiff or officer of the court, with or without the assistance of any other person, by the order of the judge, to take such offender into custody, and detain him until the rising of the court; and the judge shall be empowered, if he shall think fit, by a warrant under his hand, and sealed with the seal of the court, to commit any such offender to any prison to which he has power to commit offenders under this act for any time not exceeding seven days, or to impose upon any such offender a fine not exceeding 5*l*. for every such offence, and in default of payment thereof to commit the offender to any such prison as aforesaid for any time not exceeding seven days, unless the said fine be sooner paid.

114. That if any officer or bailiff of any court holden under this act shall be assaulted while in the execution of his duty, or if any rescue shall be made or attempted to be made of any goods levied under process of the court, the person so offending shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 5*l*., to be recovered by order of the court, or before a justice of the peace as hereinafter provided; and it shall be lawful for the bailiff of the court or any peace officer in any such case to take the offender into custody, (with or without warrant), and bring him before such court or justice accordingly.

115. That in case any bailiff of the said court who shall be employed to levy any execution against goods and chattels shall, by neglect, or connivance or omission, lose the opportunity of levying any such execution, then, upon complaint of the party aggrieved by reason of such neglect, connivance, or omission, (and the fact alleged being proved to the satisfaction of the court on the oath of any credible witness), the judge shall order such bailiff to pay such damages as it shall appear that the plaintiff has sustained thereby, not exceeding in any case the sum of money for which the said execution issued, and the bailiff shall be liable thereto, and upon demand made thereof, and on his refusal so to pay and satisfy the same, payment thereof shall be enforced by such ways and means as are herein provided for enforcing a judgment recovered in the said court.

116. That if any clerk, bailiff, or officer of the court, acting under colour or pretence of the process of the said court, shall be charged with extortion or misconduct, or with not duly paying or accounting for any money levied by him under the authority of this act, it shall be lawful for the judge to inquire into such matter in a summary way, and for that purpose to summon and enforce the attendance of all necessary parties in like manner as the attendance of witnesses in any case may be enforced, and to make such order thereupon for the repayment of any money extorted, or for the due payment of any money so levied as aforesaid, and for the payment of such damages and costs, as he shall think just; and also, if he shall think fit, to impose such fine upon the clerk, bailiff, or officer, not exceeding 10*l*., for each offence, as he shall deem adequate; and in default of payment of any money so ordered to be paid, payment of the same may be enforced by such ways and means as are herein provided for enforcing a judgment recovered in the said court.

117. That every treasurer, clerk, bailiff, or other officer employed in putting this act, or any of the powers thereof, in execution, who shall wilfully and corruptly exact, take, or accept any fee or reward whatsoever, other than and except such fees as are or shall be appointed and allowed respectively as aforesaid, for or on account of anything done or to be done by virtue of this act, or on any account whatsoever relative to putting this act into execution, shall, upon proof thereof before the said court, and in the case of a clerk, treasurer, or high bailiff on allowance of the finding of the court by the Lord Chancellor, be for ever incapable of serving or being employed under this act in any office of profit or emolument, and shall also be liable for damages as herein provided.

118. That, if any claim shall be made to or in respect of any goods or chattels taken in execution under the process of any court holden under this act, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom such process has issued; it shall be lawful for the clerk of the court, upon application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, as well before as after any action brought against such officer; to issue a summons calling before the said court as well the party issuing such process as the party making such claim; and thereupon any action which shall have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, or in any local or inferior court, in respect of such claim, shall be stayed; and the court in which such action shall have been brought, or any judge thereof, on proof of the issue of such summons, and that the goods and chattels were so taken in execution, may order the party bringing such action to pay the costs of all proceedings had upon such action after the issue of such summons out of the county court; and the judge of the county court shall adjudge upon such claim, and make such order between the parties in respect thereof, and of the costs of the proceedings, as to him shall seem fit, and such order shall be enforced in like manner as any order made in any suit brought in such court.

119. That all actions of replevin, in cases of distress for rent in arrear or damage faisan, which shall be brought in the county court, shall be brought without a writ in a court held under this act.

120. That, in every such action of replevin, the plaintiff shall be entered in the court holden under this act for the district wherein the distress was taken.

121. That, in case either party to any such action of replevin shall declare to the court in which such action shall be brought that the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or to any toll, market, fair, or franchise, is in question, or that the rent or damage in respect of which the distress shall have been taken is more than the sum of 20l., and shall become bound, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk of the court, in such sums as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the nature of the claim, and the alleged value or amount of the property in dispute, or of the rent or damage, to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and to prove before the court by which such suit shall be tried that such title as aforesaid is in dispute between the parties, or that there was ground for believing that the said rent or damage was more than 20l., then, and not otherwise, the action may be removed before any court competent to try the same in such manner as hath been accustomed.

122. That, when and so soon as the term and interest of the tenant of any house, land, or other corporeal hereditament, where the value of the premises or the rent payable in respect of such tenancy did not exceed the sum of 50l. by the year, and upon which no fine shall have been paid, shall have ended, or shall have been duly determined by a legal notice to quit, and such tenant, or, if such tenant do not actually occupy the premises, or occupy only a part thereof, any person by whom the same or any part thereof shall be then actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof respectively, it shall be lawful for the landlord or his agent to enter a plaint in the county court to be holden under this act, and thereupon a summons shall issue to the tenant or neglecting or refusing; and if the tenant or occupier shall not thereupon appear at the time and place appointed, and show cause to the contrary, and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof of which he is then in possession, to the said landlord or his agent, it shall be lawful for such landlord or agent to give to the court proof of the holding, and of the end or other determination of the tenancy, with the time or manner thereof, and, where the title of the landlord has accrued since the letting of the premises, the right by which he claims the possession; and upon proof of service of the summons, and of the neglect or refusal of the tenant or occupier, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the judge to issue a warrant under the seal of the court to any bailiff of the court, requiring and authorizing him, within a period to be therein named, not less than seven or more than ten clear days from the date of such warrant, to give possession of the premises to such landlord or agent; and such warrant shall be a sufficient warrant to the said bailiff to enter upon the premises, with such assistants as he shall deem necessary, and to give possession accordingly: Provided always, that entry upon any such warrant shall not be made on a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, or at any time except between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon: Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to protect any person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the county court from any action which may be brought against him by any such tenant or occupier for or in respect of such entry and taking possession, where such person had not, at the time of suing out the same as aforesaid, lawful right to the possession of the same premises.

123. That such summons as last aforesaid may be served either personally or by leaving the same with some person being in and apparently residing at the place of abode of the person or persons so holding over as aforesaid; provided that, if the person or persons so holding over, or any or either of them, cannot be found, and the place of abode of such person or persons shall either not be known, or admission thereto cannot be obtained for serving such summons, the posting of the said summons on some conspicuous part of the premises so held over shall be deemed to be good service upon such person or persons respectively.

124. That it shall not be lawful to bring any action or prosecution against the judge or against the clerk of the court by whom such warrant as aforesaid shall have been issued, or against any bailiff or other person by whom such warrant may be executed or summons affixed, for issuing such warrant, or executing the same respectively, or affixing such summons, by reason that the person by whom the same shall be sued out had not lawful right to the possession of the premises.

125. That, where the landlord at the time of applying for such warrant as aforesaid had lawful right to the possession of the premises, or of the part thereof so held over as aforesaid, neither the said landlord nor his agent, nor any other person acting in his behalf, shall be deemed to be a trespasser by reason merely of any irregularity or informality in the mode of proceeding for obtaining possession under the authority of this act, but the party aggrieved may, if he think fit, bring an action on the case for such irregularity or informality, in which the damage alleged to be sustained thereby shall be specially laid, and may recover full satisfaction for such special damage, with costs of suit; provided that, if the special damage so laid be not proved, the defendant shall be entitled to a verdict, and that, if proved, but assessed by the jury at any sum not exceeding 5s., the plaintiff shall recover no more costs than damages, unless the judge before whom the trial shall have been holden shall certify, that, in his opinion, full costs ought to be allowed.

126. That, in every case in which the person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the county court had not, at the time of suing out the same, lawful right to the possession of the premises, the suing out of any such warrant as last aforesaid shall be deemed a trespass by him against the tenant or occupier of the premises, although no entry shall be made by virtue of the warrant; and in case any such tenant or occupier will become bound, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the clerk of the court, in such sum as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the value of the premises, and to the probable cost of such action, to sue the person by whom such warrant was sued out with effect and without delay, and to pay all the costs of the proceeding in such action in case a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall discontinue or not prosecute his action, or become nonsuit therein, execution upon the warrant shall be stayed until judgment shall have been given in such action of trespass; and if, upon the trial of such action of trespass, a verdict shall pass for the plaintiff, such verdict and judgment thereupon shall supersede the said warrant.

127. That every bond given on the removal of any action out of the county court, or upon staying the execution of any such warrant of possession as aforesaid, or on moving for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, judgment, or nonsuit, shall be made to the other party to the action at the costs of such other party, and shall be approved by the judge, and attested under the seal of the court; and if the bond so taken be forfeited, or if, upon the proceeding for securing which such bond was given, the judge before whom such proceeding shall be had shall not certify upon the record in court that the condition of the bond hath been fulfilled, the party to whom the bond shall have been so made may bring an action of debt, and recover thereon: Provided always, that the court in which such action as last aforesaid shall be brought may, by a rule of court, give such relief to the parties liable upon such bond as may be agreeable to justice and reason, and such rule shall have the nature and effect of a deforcance to such bond.

128. That all actions and proceedings which, before the passing of this act, might have been brought in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought, or where any officer of the county court shall be a party, except in respect of any claim to any goods and chattels taken in execution of the process of the court, or the proceeds or value thereof, may be brought and determined in any such superior court, at the election of the party suing or proceeding, as if this act had not been passed.

129. That, if any action shall be commenced after the passing of this act in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaintiff might have been entered in any court holden under this act, and a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than 20*l*. if the said action is founded on contract, or less than 5*l*. if it be founded on tort, the said plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs; and, if a verdict shall not be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs as between attorney and client, unless in either case the judge who shall try the cause shall certify on the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in such superior court.

130. That all penalties, fines, and forfeitures by this act inflicted or authorised to be imposed (the manner of recovering and applying whereof is not hereby otherwise particularly directed) shall, upon proof before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction within the county or place where the offender shall reside or be, or the offence shall be committed, either by the confession of the party offending, or by the oath of any credible witness, be levied, with the costs attending the summons and conviction, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party offending, by warrant under the hand of any such justice; and the overplus (if any), after such penalties, fines, and forfeitures, and the charges of such distress and sale, are deducted, shall be returned, upon demand, unto the owner of such goods and chattels.

131. That if any such penalties, fines, and forfeitures respectively shall not be paid forthwith upon conviction, it shall be lawful for such justice to order the offender so convicted to be detained in safe custody until return can be conveniently made to such warrant of distress, unless such offender shall give sufficient security to the satisfaction of such justice for his appearance before him on such day as shall be appointed for the return of such warrant of distress, such day not being more than eight days from the time of taking any such security, which security such justice shall be empowered to take by way of recognisance or otherwise as to him shall seem fit.

132. That if upon the return of such warrant it shall appear that no sufficient distress can be had thereupon, or in case it shall appear to the satisfaction of such justice, either by the confession of the offender or otherwise, that he hath not within the jurisdiction of such justice sufficient goods and chattels whereon to levy all such penalties, forfeitures, costs, and charges, such justice may, at his discretion, without issuing any warrant of distress, commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless such penalties, forfeitures, and fines, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be sooner paid and satisfied.

133. That the monies arising from any such penalties, forfeitures, and fines as aforesaid, when paid and levied, shall (if not by this act directed to be otherwise applied) be from time to time paid to the clerk of the court, and shall be applied in aid of the general fund thereof.

134. That in all cases in which by this act any penalty or forfeiture is made recoverable before a justice of the peace, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon before him the party complained against, and on such summons to hear and determine the matter of such complaint, and on proof of the offence to convict the offender, and to adjudge him to pay the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and to proceed to recover the same, although no information in writing shall have been exhibited before him; and all such proceedings by summons without information in writing shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if an information in writing had been exhibited.

135. That in all cases where any conviction shall be had for any offence committed against this act, the form of conviction may be in the words or to the effect following; (that is to say),—

"Be it remembered, That on this — day of — in the year of our Lord —, A. B. is convicted before — of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the — [or before a judge appointed under an act passed in the — year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, here insert the title of this act,] of having [state the offence]; and I [or we] the said — do adjudge the said — to forfeit and pay for the same the sum of —, or to be committed to — for the space of —. Given under — hand and seal the day and year aforesaid."

136. That no order, verdict, or judgment, or other proceeding, made concerning any of the matters aforesaid, shall be quashed or vacated for want of form.

137. That where any distress shall be made for any sum of money to be levied by virtue of this act, the distress itself shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the information, summons, conviction, warrant of distress, or other proceeding relating thereto, nor shall the party distraining be deemed a trespasser from the beginning on account of any irregularity which shall afterwards be committed by the party so distraining, but the person aggrieved by such irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case.

138. And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this act, be it enacted, That all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act shall be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, and not afterwards, or otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if after action brought a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court, with costs, by or on behalf of the defendant.

139. That if any person shall bring any suit in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record in respect of any grievance committed by any clerk, bailiff, or officer of any court holden under this act, under colour or pretence of the process of the said court, and the jury upon the trial of the action shall not find greater damages for the plaintiff than the sum of 20*l*., no costs shall be awarded to the plaintiff in such action unless the judge shall certify in court upon the back of the record that the action was fit to be brought in such superior court.

140. Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to alter or affect the rights or privileges of the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge respectively as by law possessed, or the jurisdiction of the courts of the chancellors or vice-chancellors of the said universities, as holden under the respective charters of the said universities, or otherwise.

141. Provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the courts of the lord warden or of the vice-warden of the stannaries of Cornwall; but this provision shall not be deemed to prevent the establishment of any court under this act within the said stannaries, or to limit or affect the jurisdiction of any court so established under this act.

142. That, in construing this act all things directed or authorised to be done by or with respect to the Lord Chancellor shall and may be done by or with respect to a lord keeper or the first commissioner for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and all things directed or authorised to be done by or with respect to the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall and may be done by and with respect to three or more of the said commissioners or the lord high treasurer; and the word "person" shall be understood to mean a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, as well as individual; and every word importing the singular number shall, where necessary to give full effect to the enactments herein contained, be understood to mean several persons or things as well as one person or thing; and every word importing the masculine gender shall, where necessary, be understood to mean a female as well as a male; and the words "county court" shall be understood to mean any court holden under this act; and the term "landlord" shall be understood to mean the person entitled to the immediate reversion of the lands, or, if the property be holden in joint tenancy, coparcenary, or tenancy in common, shall be understood to mean any one of the persons entitled to such reversion; and the word "clerk" shall be understood to mean "chief clerk," or "registrar;" and the words "attorney at law" shall be understood to include a solicitor in any court of equity; and the word "agent" shall be understood to mean any person usually employed by the landlord in the letting of lands, or in the collection of the rents thereof, or specially authorised to act in any particular matter by writing under the hand of such landlord; and the word "bailiff" shall be understood to include high bailiff; unless in any of these cases there be something in the context inconsistent with such meaning.

143. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

In 2 vols. royal 12mo., price 1l. 18s. boards, the FIFTH EDITION of GRANT'S CHANCERY PRACTICE, composed anew, and according to all the existing Operative Orders of Court, including the last of 8th May, 1845.

The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of these Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted; and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

LONDON, OCTOBER 10, 1846.

WE believe we shall be doing service to the public by calling attention to the very general practice, amongst persons who have effected insurances, of not paying the premiums on the day appointed by their policies—relying that the effect of the clause, which, in some form or other, is appended to the policies of most of the London Offices, is to maintain the validity of the policy compulsorily, as against the office, if the payment is tendered within the days of grace allowed by such clause, although the contingency against which the insurance is directed shall have already happened. The practice seems to have arisen out of total forgetfulness of the authorities which already exist upon this point, and their probable effect upon the construction of the conditions annexed by most of the London Offices to their policies.

It will be found, upon examination, that all, or nearly all, the London Life and Fire Offices make mention, in their policies or the indorsed conditions, of payment of the premium within some limited period after it is actually due; and, in the case of life policies, such postponed payment is sometimes with, and sometimes without, a penalty. The custom on life policies seems to have been established with the first office, "The Amicable;" one of the terms, indeed, upon its policies being, that "The contributions are payable yearly from the date hereof; on default for one calendar month, a penalty of 6d. for every 20s. in arrear is incurred; on default for two calendar months, 1s. for every 20s. in arrear; and on default for three calendar months, the policy becomes forfeited. But the insurers have power of re-admission within six months of the avoidance of the policy, the party being in good health, and paying a penalty according to the provisions of the ninth bye-law."

VOL. X.

MM

The policies of this society depend, for their effect, so entirely upon the bye-laws, that from a policy alone it cannot be ascertained how the death of the assured, after the annual day of payment, but before actual payment within the further time limited for payment, would operate.

The cases of Tarleton v. Staniforth (5 T. R. 695) and Want v. Blunt, (12 East, 183), the latter on a life, the former on a fire policy, and both perfectly agreeing in principle, illustrate fully the point under consideration; and it is proposed, after briefly directing attention to the facts and law of those cases, to shew, by reference to the policies of some of the leading insurance offices, that very numerous parties indeed are annually incurring the risk of loss similar to that which fell on the plaintiffs in the above cases.

Tarleton v. Staniforth was an action by the assured against a fire office, to recover for a loss which occurred after the annual day of payments, but within the fifteen days mentioned in the indorsed conditions, and before payment of the premium, which was after the loss, tendered and refused. The policy had indorsed upon, and incorporated with it, a condition, that the assured "shall, as long as the managers agree to accept the same, make all future payments annually at the said office within fifteen days after the day limited by their respective policies, upon forfeiture of the benefit thereof;" and another, "That no insurance is to take place until the premium be actually paid by the insured, his, her, or their agent or agents." Upon these facts, the court was clearly of opinion, and that point was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, (1 B. & P. 471), that the policy was at end by non-payment on the very day; that the insurance was for a year, and not a year and fifteen days; and that, the receipt of the premium being in the discretion of the insurers, they had a right to refuse to continue the policy.

Went v. Blunt was on a policy securing an annuity to the plaintiff, the widow and sole executrix of the assured. The policy witnessed, that, in consideration of a quarterly premium of 2l. 13s. 6d. to be paid to the said society during the life of W. W., the assurers covenanted with W. W., his executors and administrators, that, if he should well and truly pay or cause to be paid to the said society the full sum of 2l. 13s. 6d. on every 26th of March, &c., during the life of the said W. W., or within such time after the said days respectively as was or should be allowed for that purpose by the rules of the said society, and if he should also pay and contribute his proportion of the monies which the members of the society should, during his life, be called upon to pay and contribute, according to the rules, to make good any deficiency of the funds of the society to answer the claims upon it, then, upon due proof of his death, the society would pay such annuity as therein mentioned. An N. B. was added, that, by the rules of the society, if any member neglect to pay the quarterly premiums for fifteen days after the same shall become due, the policy shall become void, unless the member (continuing in as good health as when the policy expired) pay up, within six calendar months then next, all arrears, together with 5s. for every month after such premium became due, or 5s. for the time elapsed, if less than a month. Among the rules of the society was one to the same effect as the above-mentioned note appended to the policy. W. W. died within fifteen days after a quarterly day of payment, without having paid the quarterly premium, and his executors tendered the money to the society within the fifteen days. Lord Ellenborough delivered an elaborate judgment, deciding that the policy was at an end by the death of W. W. before payment of the premium. In the course of the judgment, the learned lord referred to Tarleton v. Stanforth as decisive of the general point, that the insurance expired with the term, and did not continue during the fifteen days, or enlarged time.

By these cases the law has been long perfectly settled; indeed so long, that the decisions and the law appear, as we have above observed, to be actually forgotten in practice.

The policies of the Law Fire Insurance Society, and the indorsement, are like those in Tarleton v. Stanforth, but worded more strongly against the insured. The form of the policy recites, that A. B. has paid the sum of £— to the directors, and agreed to pay to them the sum of £— on the 24th day of June, 1847, and the like sum annually, on the corresponding day of each following year, during the continuance of the policy for insuring, &c.: and the witnessing part is, "That, from the 24th day of June, 1846, to and inclusive of the 24th day of June, 1847, and so long as the said insured shall duly pay the annual sum aforesaid, at the time aforesaid, and the directors for the time being of the said society shall agree to accept the same, the capital, stock, and property of the said society shall be subject" to pay the amount insured "according to the terms and conditions indorsed on this policy." Among the terms indorsed is the following: "Insurances granted for a year, or any longer time, may be renewed within fifteen days after the expiration thereof." And at the end of the fourth condition (and the conditions follow the terms) are the words, "Upon default in any of the payments for renewal of any policy at the times respectively limited for that purpose, the insurance on such policy shall cease;" and the fifth condition begins as follows: "No risk upon any insurance proposed to this society is to be considered as having commenced until the premium and duty, or a deposit on account thereof, be actually paid."

The policies of most of the London Offices are much in the same form; and recollecting that, by the authorities referred to, it appears clear that the mere introduction of a proviso, that if the premiums are not paid within a given time after the day when they are due the policy shall be void, will not have the effect of keeping the policy alive after failure of payment on the proper day of annual payment, it may well be considered whether there is not extreme danger in passing the day fixed by the policy for annual payment, in every case where the condition does not in the most explicit manner make the policy a policy for a year and something more, and not merely a policy for a year, with a clause giving grace in respect of the time of payment.

It may be asked, if the Offices do not intend the policy to be capable of being kept in force by a payment after the day, but within the time of grace, what is the advantage of the condition to the insured? And if the answer could be, that there is none, an inference might be drawn in favour of the saving effect of the condition. But the answer is, at least with regard to life policies, that a reasonable construction of the condition is perfectly satisfied by holding the intention to be, merely to avoid the absolute invalidity of the policy, for the purpose of not putting the insured to the expense of effecting a new insurance, and to the payment of the advanced premium due to his increased age; and not to save the policy against invalidity for all purposes.

12. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas, by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 97], intituled "An Act for regulating Railways;" and by another act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 55], intituled "An Act for the better Regulation of Railways, and for the Conveyance of Troops;" and by another act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 85], intituled "An Act to attach certain Conditions to the Construction of future Railways authorised or to be authorised by any Act of the present or succeeding Sessions of Parliament, and for other Purposes relating to Railways;" and by two other acts passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [cc. 20, 33], for consolidating in one act certain provisions usually inserted in acts authorising the making of railways, respectively, and by sundry local acts of Parliament, certain powers with respect to railways are vested in the lords of the committee of her Majesty's most honourable privy council for trade and foreign plantations; but it is expedient that a separate department be constituted for these purposes, and for other purposes relating to railways: Be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by warrant under the royal sign-manual, to appoint any number, not more than five persons, to be commissioners of railways, and from time to time, at her pleasure, to remove all or any of the said commissioners, and to appoint others in their stead, and to appoint one of the said commissioners to be their president; and any two of the said commissioners shall be competent to act in the execution of the powers vested in them by this act; and upon any vacancy in the number of the said commissioners, it shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing commissioners, not being less than two, to act, and their acts shall be as valid as if no such vacancy had occurred; and every such appointment or new appointment, and also the day on which the said commissioners shall begin to act in execution of this act, shall be published in the London Gazette.

2. That from and after the day which shall be so specified in the London Gazette as the day on which the said commissioners shall begin to act in execution of this act, all the powers, rights, and authority now vested in or exercised by the lords of the committee of her Majesty's privy council for trade and foreign plantations by virtue of the recited acts, or by any other act of Parliament, or otherwise howsoever, with respect to any railway or intended railway, shall be transferred to and vested in and exercised by the commissioners of railways, as fully as if they had been named in the said several acts of Parliament instead of the lords of the said committee: and all provisions of the said acts shall be deemed to apply to the said commissioners instead of the lords of the said committee; and all proceedings now pending before the lords of the said committee, or carried on under their authority, shall be continued and carried on by and before the said commissioners, who shall have and exercise the same powers, rights, and authority in respect of all such proceedings as if they had been originally commenced before the said commissioners.

3. That an office shall be provided in London or Westminster, under the directions of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, for the use of the commissioners appointed under this act, at or to which all notices and other documents shall be given or sent which are now by law required to be given or sent at or to the office of the lords of the said committee.

4. That the commissioners of railways shall cause a seal to be made for the purposes of their commission, and all orders and other documents proceeding from the said commissioners, and purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the said commissioners, and signed by two or more of the said commissioners, shall be received as evidence of the same respectively in all courts and before all justices and others, without any further proof thereof.

5. That the said commissioners may appoint, and at their pleasure remove, a secretary and so many other officers and servants as to them, subject to the approval of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall appear necessary for carrying on the business of the said commission.

6. That the president and two other commissioners, and the secretary, officers, and servants of the said commissioners, shall be paid by such salaries as shall be from time to time appointed by the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, not exceeding the sum of 2000*l.* in the case of the president, and the sum of 1500*l.* in the case of either of the two other paid commissioners, and, in the case of the secretary and other officers and servants of the said commission, such fit salaries as shall be from time to time appointed, with due reference to their several stations and the duties they will have to perform.

7. That the office of the said president shall not be deemed such an office as shall render him incapable of being elected or of sitting or voting as a member of the Commons House of Parliament, or as shall avoid his election if returned, or render him liable to any penalty for sitting or voting in Parliament.

8. That the office of any other of the said commissioners who shall not be entitled to receive a salary by reason of his appointment to such office, shall not be deemed such an office as shall render him incapable of being elected or of sitting or voting as a member of the Commons House of Parliament, or as shall avoid his election if returned, or render him liable to any penalty for so sitting or voting; and if any such unpaid commissioner shall be a member of the House of Commons at the time of his appointment, his acceptance of such appointment shall not avoid his election or vacate his seat in Parliament; and, for the purpose of distinguishing which commissioners are qualified to sit in Parliament under this act, the warrant appointing any such commissioner shall specify that he will not be entitled, by virtue of such appointment, to receive any salary or remuneration whatsoever.

9. And whereas in some cases railway companies have exceeded the powers given to them under the acts constituting them, or have otherwise acted contrary to the provisions of the said acts, or of the general acts for regulating railways; be it enacted, that it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to prevent any such unlawful proceedings, by the exercise of any powers now vested in the lords of the said committee.

10. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to examine and report to her Majesty and both Houses of Parliament upon any subject relating to any railway, or proposed railway, which shall be specially referred to them for their opinion by her Majesty, or by either House of Parliament; and, in the case of any application to Parliament for any act for making or maintaining any railway, it shall be their duty, if so directed by her Majesty, or by the authority of either House of Parliament, to inquire and report, on local inspection or otherwise,—

Firstly, whether there are any lines or schemes competing with the proposed railway;

Secondly, whether, by such bill, it is proposed to take powers for uniting with such railway, or proposed railway, any other railway or canal, or to purchase or lease any railway, canal, dock, road, or other public work, undertaking, or easement;

Thirdly, whether, by such bill, it is proposed to constitute any branch railway, or any other work in connexion with the proposed railway;

Fourthly, whether any plans, maps, and sections of any such proposed railway which, pursuant to any order of either House of Parliament, shall have been deposited in their office, are correct, and, if not, in what particulars and how far they are incorrect, and whether or not, in the opinion of the commissioners, such errors as they shall find are material to the object for which such plans and sections are required.

LONDON, OCTOBER 17, 1846.

(Concluded from p. 394).

In continuing the subject of our last leading article, it would be unfair not to notice, that, shortly after the decision in "Tarleton v. Stanforth," the insurance offices then of eminence gave notice, by public advertisements, that they would not take advantage of the decision, but would still hold themselves liable during the days of grace. (Vide 2 Park Insurance, 274, 8th ed.). But, however much such a determination was to the credit of those offices, it is impossible to overlook that, if such a notice was ever binding on them, it is clear, that it could only be so in favour of persons insuring expressly upon the faith of the undertaking implied by it.

There is a great variety in the conditions of the London life offices on the point under consideration, and some appear to be framed with the view of security against such cases as Went v. Blunt. For example, the Legal and General has the following condition:—"A policy will not become void if a premium shall be paid within thirty days next after the same shall become payable, notwithstanding the death, or other event upon which the sum assured by the policy shall become due, shall have happened before the payment of the premium; but if the premium shall not be paid before the expiration of thirty days from the day on which the same shall become payable according to the terms of the policy, or to any subsequent agreement with the society, then the policy shall be void." The Legal and Commercial Office, and the Equity and Law Office, have conditions somewhat similar.

No legal decision has been made upon the effect of such a condition,—it may operate at law according to its apparent meaning, but in principle nothing can be more self-contradictory or ridiculous. Insurance is based necessarily and naturally on the doctrine of probabilities; but, under such a clause as that above referred to, a certainty is attempted to be insured,—a perfect certainty of both time and amount. The condition is, moreover, at variance with the body of the policy, and either one or the other must be inoperative.

Upon the whole, there appears to be room for at least a doubt, whether an office would, under such a condition, be obliged to receive the premium after the event had happened upon which the money assured was to become payable, although it would of course be at liberty to take the premium and pay the money assured, if its managers should think fit*.

Other offices make no mention of the happening of the contingency before payment. Thus, by the Law Life policies it is "Declared, on behalf of the society, by the three directors thereof whose names are hereunto subscribed, that, in case the said assured shall die before or upon the said 23rd day of June, in the said year 1847, or in case he shall survive that day, and he or his assigns shall, before or upon the 24th day of June which will be in the year 1847, and in each and every succeeding year during which he shall be living, well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the directors of the said society for the time being, the annual premium or sum of £—, of lawful money current in Great Britain, the society" &c. And there is indorsed a condition:—"Policies will not be considered to be in force beyond thirty days after the expiration of the year, unless the premium then due shall have been actually paid at the office of the society in London, on the receipt of two directors. But should proof be given to the satisfaction of the directors, that the party or parties whose life or lives hath or have been assured, continue in good health, the policies may be revived at any period within six months, on the payment of a fine to be fixed by a board of directors, not exceeding 10s. per cent. on the sum assured; or at any period within thirteen months, on the payment of such fine as the board of directors may think reasonable."

* These observations are applicable also to the Insurance Fire Office policies, which have the following conditions indorsed:—"All insurances shall be deemed to have expired at four o'clock in the afternoon of the last day of the term for which the policy, whether annual or septennial, shall have been granted; but fifteen days shall be allowed to every person insured, to be accounted from the expiration of his or her policy, for the purpose of renewing the same; and in case any loss or damage shall happen by fire before four o'clock in the afternoon of the last of those fifteen days, and such policy shall be renewed during that time, or the premium paid for the renewal thereof, then such renewed policy shall take effect from the expiration of the former policy, so as to cover such loss or damage to the extent insured." This condition is evidently intended to get over the decision in Tarleton v. Stanforth.

The policies of the London Life Assurance are to the same effect as the Law Life policies, but the conditions or rules of the society do not appear on the policy; they are printed on the cover in which it is sent to the assured. The conditions of the London Assurance Company (allowing thirty days) are much the same, but contain the further term:—"No assurance is in force until the premium is actually paid." The Royal Exchange Assurance Company insures on similar conditions, and makes one of its terms, that "No assurance will be in force until the premium has been paid."

Enough forms have been quoted to shew the nature of this class of offices; their terms are similar to, and must receive a similar construction with, those in Want v. Blunt; indeed, a large portion of the reasoning which the court applied to the policy and rules in that case, is entirely applicable to the policies of this class of offices, inasmuch as the words "he and his assigns" in the Law Life policy, "the said assured or the assigns of the said assured" in the London Life Assurance policy, clearly indicate an intention to exclude the executors or administrators of the assured from any benefit of the fifteen days.

It should seem tolerably clear, that the death of the assured, in this class of offices, within the fifteen days or other period after the true day of payment, would cause the loss of the whole sum insured; and that whatever the company might pay, would be as a matter of favour or charity, not of right.

This state of things arises out of, or rather is part of, the general want of punctuality in making periodical payments—it is unsound, improper, and unbusinesslike. Why should not the contract be distinctly stated? why not all the terms be contained in the policy, or all of them in the conditions? If it be intended that any insurance shall be in the first instance for a year and fifteen days, and afterwards for a year, beginning to run from the end of the fifteen days, with an additional year's premium on the happening of the event assured against during the last fifteen days of each further year, why is it not so stated? Again, why should not the premium be payable punctually at the end of the year? Is there any magic in the fifteen or thirty days' allowance? The insured must be punctual to the last day allowed, why can he not be so to the true day of payment? If there be any good reason for allowing fifteen days, then, upon principle, any length of time should be allowed, on payment, with interest, of the premiums accrued in the interval. Thus much is certain, that a prudent insurer will take special care to pay the premiums of all policies on or before the day fixed for annual payment, and run no risk of losing the insurance by any accidental event, or the bad faith of an insurance company. Insurance companies usually act in a liberal and honourable spirit; but it must not be forgotten, that instances of conduct of another sort have occurred, and that taking strict advantage of the terms of insurance is usually defended upon the ground of some alleged suspicion of improper conduct of the assured, which the office is not able to make out by strict legal proof.

Whatever may be the difference of opinion as to certain of the preceding observations and criticisms, it is believed that all will concur in the opinion that the real contract between the insurers and the insured should be shortly and clearly expressed in one instrument, which should be in the custody of the insured; and that no term or condition should be left ambiguous, or require to be extracted from contradictory phrase, or to be sought in separate documents, or remain in the discretion of the insurers; and that, whatever the insured has contracted for, he and his representatives should receive as of right, and not by indulgence, or out of compassion.

STRICTURES UPON THE CASE of BROWNE v. HOUGHTON, (Reported 10 Jur., Part 1, p. 747).

It is a very wise and decorous rule not to object, on slight grounds, to the recent decisions of any of our judges. This restraint, however, does not operate in the instance before us, for the error which (according to the report) was committed in Browne v. Houghton is so manifest, that nothing but the general accuracy of the reports of cases in the court in question which appear in this journal can induce us to receive this particular report as a correct account of the actual decision.

In Browne v. Houghton, it was held, that a direction to accumulate rents during minorities, engrafted on limitations of real property in strict settlement, and not secured by any term or trust created in precedence to the estates tail, was absolutely and totally void for remoteness; the reported ground of this decision being, that the case was concluded by Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford (2 Ves. & Bea. 54) and Marshall v. Holloway, (2 Swanst. 432). And the Vice-Chancellor is represented to have been so clear in opinion, that he did not hear the reply.

By neither counsel nor judge does it seem to have been observed, that the provision for accumulation, the validity of which was questioned, was, from the first, capable of being destroyed by any and every tenant in tail entitled under the limitations; and that, consequently, it was free from any objection on the ground of remoteness. Decision after decision, and treatise upon treatise, have laid it down as a well-established rule, that no limitation, trust, power, proviso, or restriction liable to be destroyed by tenants in tail entitled under valid limitations, in the same instrument, can possibly be void by virtue of the rule against perpetuities. Not only, however, was this general and unvarying rule lost sight of, but it was also not remarked, that, in Southampton v. Hartford, the trust for accumulations was secured by a term of years preceding the estates tail, which (and, therefore, the trust of it) could not possibly be destroyed; and in Marshall v. Holloway, the trust for accumulation was declared of the fee itself in priority to all the limitations, so that it was not within the power of any tenant in tail entitled under them. But, in Browne v. Houghton, the proviso was simply engrafted upon the limitations, by way of partial defeasance thereof; so that it was, ab initio, destructible by the first tenant in tail who should attain his majority.

Upon these grounds, it is perfectly clear that the decision in this case ought to have been the reverse of that actually pronounced. This must, we presume, be attributed to the circumstance of the rules and distinctions just mentioned not having been (so far as the report informs us) at all presented to the mind of the court.

That there is no doubt whatever upon the subject, the learned reader may further certify himself, by referring to the authorities quoted in Lewis on Perpetuity, (pp. 562, 594, and 663—672). X.

Reviews.

The Practice of the Courts under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, &c. By JOHN JACOB, Esq., Barrister at Law.
[Stevens & Norton, 1846.]

The New County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, &c. By HENRY UDALL, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.
[Stevens & Norton, 1846.]

The appearance of a new statute affecting any branch of the law, is regularly the signal for the publication of editions of the statute, prepared by learned editors, with more or less of useful learning displayed in the annotations which form the chief value of such publications. It was not to be expected that the promulgation of a statute so important as the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, would be without the usual accompaniment of numerous editions, enriched by notes critical, practical, &c.; and, accordingly, we believe numerous editions of this act are already before the public. Two of them only are before us, and we shall presently comment upon their merits.

Before, however, doing so, we should wish to offer a few remarks, and those chiefly by way of advice to young barristers, anxious to distinguish themselves, and to attract, by legitimate means, that notice, without which the deepest learning and the most brilliant talents are of little avail. It appears to be a prevalent notion among young professional men, that an act of Parliament effecting great changes in the law, and the provisions of which are, therefore, necessarily untouched by decision, cannot be understood by the Profession in its naked form. Hence, no doubt, they conceive, that, by printing it with notes purporting to explain its mysteries, they are extensively enlightening the public.

It appears, also, to be a prevalent notion among such young men, that all books have a great circulation, and that if their names only appear on the back of a book of some kind, they forthwith become known men, and, being known, their professional merits will unavoidably be soon tried and tested. Both these notions we believe to be unfounded, but the latter more than the former. It may be sometimes more convenient for a professional man to read an act of Parliament in the form of a slight and portable octavo, neatly printed, than in the form in which acts are issued by the Queen's printer; and it may occasionally be convenient to him to refer to the notes, shewing what the law was that the act purports to affect, or what are the various constructions of which the clauses of modern acts are usually susceptible. It may, therefore, sometimes be really useful to the public that some young lawyer should, on the appearance of a new statute, publish an edition of it. But, with regard to the notion, that by doing so he in any, the slightest degree, lays the foundation of that species of fame, from which he may expect the solid reward of his vigils by the midnight lamp; we hold such a notion to be a pure fancy, founded on total ignorance of the state of the Profession. And we should, therefore, if we were asked to give advice to any young barrister desirous of surmounting the evil of friendless obscurity, advise him, if he does not like the labour of writing a really solid work, to fight a duel,—to win a rowing match, or a foot-race,—or to commit a breach of privilege,—anything rather than to edit an act of Parliament immediately upon its coming out. We are well aware that on this point there are many opinions, both as to the utility of such labours to the public, and as to their utility to the professional reputation of the editor; and while expressing our own opinion, we are quite willing to leave others to the enjoyment of theirs. We shall therefore now, after entering our protest against the class of works before us, which we cordially dislike, proceed to discuss the merits of the particular specimens before us, keeping in mind, that, since there are people who like barristers to prepare editions of acts of Parliament with notes, to tell them what the acts mean, or what they do not mean, it is important to such persons to be assisted in their selection of the best editions.

Mr. Udall's edition of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, before us, contains some useful notes, chiefly consisting of references to decisions made in Ireland under the Civil Bill Jurisdiction; but partly consisting also of critical observations on the clauses of the act itself. Of the notes to Mr. Udall's edition, we select the following as a fair specimen, in reference to the 68th clause, enacting, "That it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action." On this, the following is the note:—

"The plaintiff shall not divide 'any cause of action' without abandoning the excess above 20l.: thus, if an entire debt is due, say on a bill of exchange for 40l., he cannot bring an action for 20l. and afterwards sue for the balance. Thus far this is clear. The large majority, however, of pecuniary claims are tradesmen's accounts, consisting of a variety of items, sold at different times, for each of which there is a separate contract or cause of action. Had there been nothing further in the section, but little or no doubt could have existed but that the creditor might have proceeded in separate actions for each item, and recovered his whole demand by successive suits in these courts. The object of the section was no doubt to prevent this being done, and to protect a debtor from a multiplicity of suits where one would suffice. Has this been effected? This appears to me to depend principally on the words I have marked in italics in the section—'any plaintiff having cause of action' for which a plaint might be entered under this act, if not for more than 20l." Does this extend the meaning of the sec'tion to any number of causes of action for which but one plaint would be necessary? Can 'cause of action' be construed to be, for this purpose, the same as one demand? for a demand may include infinite causes of action. It is certainly very far from clear that such is the meaning of the section. That part of it which enacts that the judgment shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such causes of action will not aid the supposed intention: it might, perhaps, have done so had the words been inverted, and it had stood thus,—that the judgment should be in full discharge of all causes of action in respect to such demand. The question simply, what is a dividing of action, has received judicial interpretation in a case that arose as to the jurisdiction of the county court,—The King v. The Sheriff of Herefordshire, (1 B. & Ad. 672). The application was for a writ to prohibit the sheriff from proceeding in two suits in his county court at the suit of the same plaintiff against the same defendant, and it appeared that the facts were these:—

"A. became indebted to B. in a sum not exceeding 40s., for the carriage of a parcel of goods, and in a month afterwards incurred another debt to B. not exceeding 40s., for the carriage of a second parcel. A. brought two actions in the county court for the respective debts:—Held, that the causes of action were distinct, and that A. was entitled to sue separately for each demand, and the Court of King's Bench refused a prohibition.' In that case, Lord Tenterden, giving judgment, said, this was not a splitting of actions, 'to be so, the cause of action must be one and entire: in these cases the two items are perfectly distinct debts, the one having no connexion with the other;' and he added, that the plaintiff might have sued for one before the other was due; and that, as he had a remedy for the first debt, so he must have one for the second. The Irish statute, for giving the civil bill jurisdiction to the assistant barrister's court, 36 Geo. 3, c. 25, s. 8, has the following provision:—"That no cause of action still subsisting, and, in the whole, amounting to a sum beyond such sum as is made, according to the nature of the case, recoverable by force of this act, shall be split or divided, so as to make the ground of two or more different actions, in order to bring such cases within the jurisdiction created by this act." The words 'no cause of action still subsisting, and, in the whole, amounting to a sum,' &c. would, at the first view, lead to an inference that the Legislature intended to make it apply to all causes of action existing at the time of the commencement of the suit; but the contrary has been held,—as, where A. lent B. a sum of money, and some time afterwards another sum:—Held, that A. might sue for them separately. See the cases collected in Napier's Digest Civ. Bill. The rule appears to have been settled by the decision of Bushe, C. J., in the case of Hamblin v. Hamblin, reported in Mr. Napier's Digest. When that case came on for appeal, the learned Chief Justice was inclined to consider it a splitting of a cause of action; but, during the argument, the above case of The King v. The Sheriff of Herefordshire was cited, and, after taking time to consider, he, as is stated, on the authority of that case being so much in point, held, that he had no further difficulty in deciding that it was within the jurisdiction of the civil court. It would, however, have been more satisfactory had the determination proceeded upon the words of the statute itself, rather than upon the English case, which determined simply what was a splitting a cause of action. One would be almost inclined to doubt the above being the only reason given, if it were not reported by a gentleman of the acknowledged learning and accuracy of Mr. Napier. The Westminster Court of Requests Act (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 137, s. 42) has terms very much more special and defined: it is, 'That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, so as to enable any plaintiff to split or divide any cause of action for the recovery of any debt or demand, where the whole sum that shall appear to be due and owing shall amount to more than 5*l.*, in order that the same may be made the ground of two or more actions, causes, or matters in controversy, for the purpose of bringing such actions, causes, or matters within the jurisdiction of the said court."

Mr. Udall has also a very sensible note on the 91st section, on which some observations were printed ante, (10 Jur. 341):—"A question," says the learned annotator, "arises as to what the fees mentioned in this section are to be a remuneration for. Are they to be the remuneration for investigating whether a party has a cause of action as well as the conducting the action in court? or are they the remuneration for doing the business in court only? The former construction would lead to considerable absurdity. Take, for instance, the case of replevin for a distress damage feasant. The client consults his attorney. If the attorney advises that his client has a good case, and goes on to trial, he cannot recover his fees for advising and investigating, although the party succeeds; but, if he advises him that he has no case, and that there is no use to go on, he can. Or, supposing he advises him that he has a good cause of action, but declines to be the attorney in the new courts, he could recover more if he declined to go on than if he were successful in the action. It, however, is by no means an answer to a proposed construction merely because it leads to an absurdity. Such a result only operates as a warning to look out for a more reasonable construction if it can be found, and it appears to me this can be arrived at by construing the words 'appearing or acting in the said court' in a strictly literal sense. It is, however, by no means clear that this is the true construction. It may be observed that the latter part of the section speaks of the taxation of costs. One cannot conceive what taxation would be necessary if the fees mentioned apply to the whole charges touching and concerning the cause. It will also be observed, that the fees mentioned apply to the summary jurisdiction of the court only. See note to sect. 74 as to the meaning of the term 'that the judge shall proceed in a summary way.' When one sees the amount in dispute between litigants made the measure of remuneration for professional services, it brings to remembrance a former celebrated law code and its schedule of fees, by which one and the same fee was to be paid for each of the several matters mentioned in the first item, thus:—"To serjeants and barristers at law, upon a motion, reference, giving advice, or signing bills or pleadings." (See Lord Somers' Commentary in the Law Tracts, 6th vol., p. 178)."

Mr. Jagoe's edition of the act is by no means so full or so erudite in the matter of notes as Mr. Udall's. Indeed, generally, in his notes, we perceive little more than a conversion of the terms used in the clauses in the act into other terms, in order to explain them. We should except, however, from this censure, the note on the 119th section, touching actions in replevin, which, by referring to the existing law upon replevin, will assist those who have to act under the new statute. On the whole, we should say that both these little books may be found useful in their way, but we should certainly give the preference to Mr. Udall's.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed John Lane the younger, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Warwick.

In one thick Volume, price 18s. boards.
THE REAL PROPERTY STATUTES passed in the Reigns of William IV. and Victoria; including Prescription, Limitation of Actions, Abolition of Fines, &c., and Judgments, &c. With copious Notes and Forms of Deeds. Fourth Edition, corrected and enlarged, with new Cases and Statutes. By LEONARD SHELFORD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the absence of the Marginal Note.

LONDON, OCTOBER 24, 1846.

OUR readers will perceive, in this day's JURIST, a communication from a correspondent on the subject of trusts for accumulation. The cases there referred to, and in particular the very recent case of Browne v. Houghton, (10 Jur. 747), afford strong proof of the undeviating wish of men, to perpetuate beyond the grave, their dominion over their property. That such a desire may be natural we do not deny, but it is not of course that the law should favour a human propensity merely because it is natural; on the contrary, the object and proper function of law is to control those tendencies of the human mind which are inconsistent with the well-being of society; and there is, perhaps, no subject to which the influence of a wholesome and effective law can be better directed, than that of the almost universal desire of mankind to dictate to as much of future generations as possible, the mode in which they shall enjoy property.

Many persons appear to think, influenced, no doubt, by the habit of considering the great power of disposition by will that the law of England has long given to the owners of property, that the natural law gives to a man the right of absolute testamentary disposition over the worldly goods that he has acquired. The practice of mankind is, however, opposed to any such doctrine. Among the Jews, no power of disposition extended in general beyond half a century; for, as in the year of the Jubilee, that is, every fifty years from the taking possession by the children of Israel of the land of promise, every man who could make out his title to lands that had been sold in the preceding half century was to return to his possession*, it follows that no power of disposition could extend over a greater period than such half century. "In the year of this Jubilee," says the ancient Hebrew law, "ye shall return every man unto his possession." (Lev. cap. 25, ver. 13). And again, "The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me. If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold; and if the man have none to redeem it, and himself be able to redeem it, then let him, &c.; but if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee; and in the jubilee it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession." (Lev. chap. 25, vers. 23 to 28).

By the law of France at this day, no man has unlimited testamentary power of disposition over his property, whether he has acquired it by descent or by his own industry; but the law disposes of a given portion of it to his family, both in the ascending and descending line, leaving him a testamentary disposition only over the remainder.

"Les libéralités, soit par actes entre vifs, soit par testament, ne pourront excéder la moitié des biens du disposant, s'il ne laisse à son décès qu'un enfant légitime; le tiers s'il laisse deux enfans; le quart s'il en laisse quatre ou un plus grand nombre.

"Les libéralités par actes entre vifs, ou par testament, ne pourront excéder la moitié des biens, si, à défaut d'enfans, le défunt laisse un ou plusieurs ascendans dans chacune des lignes paternelle et maternelle; et les trois quarts, s'il ne laisse d'ascendans que dans une ligne." (Code Civil, liv. 3, tit. 2, ss. 913, 915).

Our own law, which, we believe, gives larger powers of testamentary disposition than the laws of any known civilised community, still exercises some sort of control over the caprices of testators, by restricting them from so tying up property as to make it inalienable for more than a given period after the testator's death. The question, whether a man is to be any and what extent deprived of the power of prescribing what shall be done with his property after his death, is, in fact, entirely one of conventional, and not of natural law. By the natural law, it would seem, if, indeed, there be any such thing as a natural law of property, that with life all dominion over property must cease. But this doctrine, it has been thought, would be so far at variance with the ordinary feelings of mankind, as to impede the operation of the desire of acquiring property; and hence, we find, in most codes of law, some testamentary powers recognised. On the other hand, to permit a citizen of a civilised state to prolong his dominion over his property after his death to any great extent, is manifestly inconvenient.

In this country, an immense portion of the litigation with which society is convulsed, arises out of the intricate dispositions that testators, under the sanction of the law, attempt to make of their property, so as to extend their control as far as possible into futurity; and it is a question deserving the serious consideration of the Legislature, whether the testamentary power recognised by the law of England does not far exceed that which the well-being of society requires. Attempts to tie up property, as it is called, so as to protect future generations against their own imprudence, afford them protection only at the expense of depriving them of self-reliance, and of the incentives to prudence; and it may be doubted whether they do not more mischief to society by destroying independence of character, than they do good by restraining waste. On the whole, we should be much inclined to think that our law would be improved, if it went further than it does in controlling the disposition of man to regulate the devolution of their property after their own death, and, in particular, in checking every attempt at withdrawing property from circulation, by a compulsory accumulation, long after any living mind can preside over it, and judge of its fitness to the existing wants of the community.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—I have been rather surprised by the strictures contained in your last Number (p. 414) upon the case of Browne v. Houghton, (10 Jur. 747), and particularly by the attempt to distinguish that case from Lord Southampton v. Hartford, (2 Ves. & Bea. 64). Your correspondent, X., argues, that, because the trusts for accumulation were secured in the latter case by a term of years preceding the estates tail, they could not be destroyed; and that in that consists the distinction between the two cases; the trusts for accumulation being, as he urges, in Browne v. Houghton, engrafted upon the very limitations of the estates tail, in partial defiance thereof, and destructible by any tenant in tail having attained twenty-one.

It appears to me, that, if the case of Lord Southampton v. Hartford is carefully examined, it will be found that no such distinction substantially exists.

The trusts for accumulation secured by the term, in Lord Southampton v. Hartford, were, (and I cite them at length, that your readers may see clearly whether they support the arguments that I found upon them),

"that during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons respectively, who, for the time being, should, by virtue of the limitations in the said settlement contained, be immediate tenant for life, in tail male, or in tail, in possession of or actually entitled to the yearly rents, issues, and profits of the said estates, the said trustees should receive and take the said yearly rents, &c., and, after payment thereof of the charges and incumbrances which should then affect the said estates, should, during such minority or respective minorities as aforesaid, lay out and invest the said yearly rents, &c., in the purchase of public stocks or funds, or upon government or real securities in England, to be from time to time altered and varied as occasion should require; and receive the dividends, interest, &c., and lay out and invest the same in the purchase of or upon stocks, funds, or securities of the like nature, to be also from time to time altered and varied, so that the same might, during such minority or respective minorities, accumulate; and to stand possessed of and interested in the sums of money, stocks, funds, and securities to be purchased with such yearly rents, and the interest, dividends, and annual produce respectively, and the accumulations thereof respectively, and the dividends and annual produce of such accumulations, in trust for such person or persons respectively as should, immediately upon the expiration of such minority or respective minorities as aforesaid, or the death or deaths of such minor or minors as aforesaid, be tenant or tenants in possession of or entitled to the rents and profits, and be of the age of twenty-one years; and it was further declared, that, in the meantime and until the said rents, issues, and profits should amount to a sum competent for the discharge of the incumbrances in the said settlement directed to be discharged, the trustees might invest the same in the purchase of stock, &c., and that in such case the dividends and interest of such last-mentioned stock should be accumulated, and the same and the accumulations thereof be laid out and invested as last thereinbefore mentioned, till the same respectively should be applied in the discharge of the said sums of money so to be discharged."

"Under this settlement," observes the accurate author of the Treatise on the Thellusson Act, "since there might possibly be an indefinite succession of tenants in tail dying under twenty-one years of age, the aforesaid trust might cause an accumulation of the rents and profits of the said settled estates for an indefinite period." (Treatise on the Thellusson Act, p. 93). And this is the view that was taken of the case both in the arguments at the bar, and in the judgment. "This," said Sir W. Grant, "is an attempt wholly to sever the surplus rents and profits from the legal ownership of the estate for a time that may extend much beyond the period allowed for executory devises or trusts of accumulation, and to give them to a person who may not come into existence until after that period. . . . As to the possibility that Lord Southampton may attain the age of twenty-one, that never has been held to be an answer to the objection, that the trust, as originally created, is too remote. Supposing this accumulation allowed to go on, and he dies under twenty-one, what is to become of the accumulated fund? The deed says, it shall go to the first person entitled to the estate who shall attain twenty-one, though there should be no such person for a century to come." It is clear, from these passages, that the vice of the trust, in the view of Sir W. Grant, was, that, by its terms, if there was no person entitled within twenty-one years after the lives in being, who should attain twenty-one, the vesting of the accumulated fund was intended to be suspended till there should be a person entitled who should attain twenty-one, at whatever time that might happen; in other words, that the measure of the period for the vesting of the accumulated fund should not be necessarily a period not exceeding twenty-one years after the termination of the lives in being, but the happening of an event which might not happen till some period infinitely beyond the twenty-one years.

It is true, as X. suggests, that the term preceding the estate tail could not be destroyed by any tenant in tail under the settlement. But that does not affect the question. It would not have been necessary for a tenant in tail, having attained twenty-one, to destroy the term or its trusts in order to arrest the accumulation, so far as his estate was concerned; because the trust for accumulation itself directed that the accumulated fund should go to the first person entitled who should attain twenty-one. Such person would take it under, and not in derogation of, the trust. But the question was, whether, if the trust was to be held valid, there would not be, in events which might happen, an accumulated fund, at a period exceeding the period when the estate in the land could remain unvested;—and it was clear that such a state of things might happen consistently with the intention of the declared trust; indeed, that, upon the construction of the trust, such was its very intention. Now, it must not be forgotten that the rule against perpetuities is not, that an estate shall not be inalienable, by reason of any personal incapacity of the owner to convey, for more than twenty-one years after lives in being; but only that its vesting, and consequent capacity of being aliened, shall not be suspended beyond that period. Hence it is, that, indirectly, an estate tail may be in fact inalienable for much more than the twenty-one years; not because it is not susceptible of alienation, but because it may be in the possession of an owner personally incapable of doing the acts necessary for its alienation.

The test of validity in a trust for accumulation debars the Thellusson Act must be the same. If it be so framed that the accumulated fund must vest within the twenty-one years, it will be good, although it might vest in an owner personally incapable of disposing of it; but, if its terms be such, that, if allowed to take effect, it would suspend the vesting of the accumulated fund beyond the twenty-one years, then it is wholly bad. It is from confounding, as it appears to my judgment, the trust for accumulation of the rents, with the limitations of the estate, that your correspondent has fallen into the error of distinguishing Browne v. Houghton from Lord Southampton v. Hertford, and of denying the soundness of the former decision. The trust for accumulation in Browne v. Houghton is, it is true, in a certain sense, engrafted upon the limitations of the estate; that is to say, the estates are first limited, and then the trusts as to the rents are fastened upon those limitations by way of partially cutting them down. But it is not strictly correct to say, that, in this case any more than in Lord Southampton v. Hertford, a recovery by a tenant in tail having attained twenty-one would destroy the trust. The trust for accumulation in Browne v. Houghton ceases, by virtue of its very terms, as it did in the earlier case, upon any person attaining twenty-one. And though it may be true, that, if it did not so cease, it might be destroyed by the recovery of the tenant in tail, that is no reason for supporting it as a valid trust, if it is found that it cannot be, and is intended from its very structure not to be, destroyed in events that may happen, and under which the estate tail cannot be barred; that is, if it cannot be destroyed upon the vesting of an estate tail, which cannot be actually aliened, by reason of the minority of the tenant in tail. The principle of the decisions in both the cases referred to is, Sir, I conceive, the same: viz. that, without reference to what may happen or be done to the trust for accumulation, on any of the persons to whom the estate is limited in possession, attaining twenty-one, either by reason of the form of the trust itself, or of any act of the person entitled affecting such trust, the trust is, in both cases, void, on the ground of its tending to perpetuity; because it is so constructed, that, if there should be successive minorities extending over a greater period than twenty-one years after the lives in being, the trust for accumulation would not, according to its terms, cease, and the accumulated fund would not vest; while at the same time the trust, even if destructible, could not be destroyed so as to accelerate the vesting of the accumulated fund, by reason of the personal incapacity of the owner of the estate. If this be kept in view as the true principle of the decisions in Lord Southampton v. Hertford and Browne v. Houghton, it will be seen that they are in perfect harmony with each other, and that neither is inconsistent with the general rule relied upon by your correspondent X. C. S. D.

PART II.

ADMINISTRATION

of the Estate of an Executor who had bequeathed his Testator's Assets as his own.—Where an executor deals with, and ultimately bequeaths, certain canal shares of his testator with some of his own, as if they were all his own, and dies indebted to his testator's estate, what is due from his estate to that of his testator is not to be exclusively or primarily paid out of the canal shares of his testator, but the legatees of those shares take them as if they were his property; and the debts due from his estate to the estate of his testator must be paid in the same manner as his other debts; that is, his general personal estate must be applied first in payment of them; and, if that is insufficient, the specific legatees of the canal shares and the specific legatees of other chattels (if any) must contribute proportionably to make up the deficiency. Ibbotson v. Ibbotson, 13 Sim. 544.

Legacy to a Debtor of a Testator whose Debt is barred.—An executor is not obliged to pay a legacy to a legatee who is indebted to the testator in the amount of the legacy, although the debt may have been barred by the Statute of Limitations before the testator's death: for the statute does not extinguish the debt; it only takes away the means of recovering it. The debt, therefore, is a part of the testator's assets; and the executor has a right to say to the legatee, "Pay yourself out of that portion of the assets in your hands." Courtney v. Williams, 15 Law J. 204—L. C.

Contribution between specific Legatees and Devisees towards Payment of Debts.—General Rules of Construction.—Where a testator, whose assets are wholly legal, devises all his real estate, no part of which is in mortgage, or specifically charged with any debt, and gives specific and pecuniary legacies, and does not charge the real estate generally, or any part of it, with the payment of debts, and the personal estate not specifically bequeathed is insufficient for the payment of the specialty debts; so much of the debts as the personal estate not specifically bequeathed is insufficient to pay, must not be borne wholly by the specific legatees, but by them and the devisees rateably. For, although the personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of the debts, yet this is only a rule of positive law, and not of abstract justice; and the effect of pursuing a branch of law merely positive to its full extent and consequences, without exception or mitigation, must be a departure from natural equity. And it may be stated to be a rule of construction, that every will ought to be read, as in effect embodying a declaration by the testator, that the payment of his debts shall be, as far as possible, so arranged as not to disappoint any of the gifts made by it, unless the instrument discloses a different intention. Tombs v. Roch, 10 Jur. 534—V. C. B.

* See Preface to Part I, ante, p. 185. This Second Part comprises the points which occur in THE JURIST and the Law Journal, from the beginning of April to the end of July, and in the other Reports published during the same period; namely, 7 Beavan, part 3; 13 Simons, part 4; 4 Hare, part 4; 14 Meeson & Welsby, part 4; 6 Adolphus & Ellis, part 2; Davidson & Mortlake, part 5; 7 Manning & Granger, part 4; and 1 Manning, Granger, & Scott, part 4.

Priority of Annuities over Legacies.—Although a testator directs his trustees to stand possessed of the proceeds of the sale of his residuary real and personal estate, upon trust, in the first place, to pay a certain debt, and then upon trust to set apart and invest a sufficient sum to answer certain annuities; and, in the next place, after making such investments, upon trust to pay the several pecuniary legacies given by his will; the annuities have no priority over the legacies: for the directions may amount to no more than this: first, "I direct so and so; secondly, I direct so and so; next, I direct the payment of legacies." Thwaites v. Foreman, 10 Jur. 483—L. C.

See "Conversion."

of a Mortgagee's Title.—Where a mortgage deed recites that the mortgagor is seised in fee, and another person indorses on it that he, "the purchaser of the equity of redemption," has further charged the estate; such a memorandum, though, perhaps, not strictly an estoppel, for want of mutuality, is an admission, which may be used as evidence, that he is in the same position as the mortgagor; that he has no other title than one derived from him. And as the mortgagor is estopped from setting up against the mortgagee that the legal title in any part of the premises is in any other person; so, his assignee of the equity of redemption is so prevented from setting up this defence. Doe d. Crawford v. Stone, 10 Jur. 480—C. P.

AGREEMENT.—See "Compromise," "Specific Performance."

ALIENATION.

Attempt to restrain Alienation.—Alienation by Insolvency.—Where a testator directs an annuity to be paid to a person until he shall attempt to anticipate or incumber the same, or until any other person may claim the same; and, from and after such attempt or claim, the testator wills that the same be applied for his personal support, clothing, or maintenance, and for no other purpose whatever; the annuity will pass to his assignee, if he takes the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. Youngusband v. Gisborne, 10 Jur. 419—L. C.

ALTERNATIVE LIMITATION.—See "Remoteness."

ANNUITY.

Postponed Annuity.—Words annexed to a prior gift extending to a subsequent one.—Where a testator gives all his property to a person, he paying to another a certain annuity for life, and, at her death, to pay one of her sons a certain sum, and another son another sum, and her daughter an annuity for life, and a certain sum twelve months after the testator's death; and he directs that certain other persons shall have legacies twelve months after his death, and annuities; the annuity to the daughter is deferred until the death of the mother. Roobuck v. Habersham, 10 Jur. 279—V. C. B.

Necessity for Inrolment.—Where a person is seised of freehold property in fee simple in possession, or is entitled to freehold property under a conveyance to such uses as he shall appoint, and, until appointment, to the use of himself for life, remainder to a trustee for life, in trust for him, and to bar dower, remainder to his heirs and assigns; and he grants an annuity, and the property is of greater annual value than the annuity, beyond any other annuity or the interest of any other principal sum charged thereon; such annuity is within the exceptions in the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 141, and does not require inrolment. Doe d. Butler v. Lord Kensington, 15 Law J. 153—Q. B.

Secured both by Rights of Entry and by a Term.—Where an annuity is secured not only by a right of entry and distress, and by a right of entry and perception of the profits given to the grantee, but also by a term limited by the same deed to a trustee for him to raise arrears by devise, sale, or mortgage; the rights of entry will not destroy the term, nor will the term defeat the right of entry: both kinds of remedies may co-exist. Doe d. Butler v. Lord Kensington, 15 Law J. 153—Q. B.

Whether charged on Rents payable during the Annuitant's Life only, or on the Corpus of the Estate.—Where a testator gives freehold and leasehold estates to trustees, upon trust to receive the rents when and as the same shall become due and payable, and thereout to pay his wife an annuity during her life, and, after her decease, upon trust to convey the estates to the use of other persons; in such case, the estates not being directed to be conveyed subject to the annuity, the annuity is not charged on the rents generally, whether payable in the vendor's lifetime or after her decease; and, therefore, if the rents received during the widow's lifetime are insufficient to pay the annuity, it must abate. Foster v. Smith, 15 Law J. 183—L. C.

Consideration.—Seduction and Cohabitation.—Past seduction and cohabitation are not a good consideration to support a grant of an annuity. Beaumont v. Rex, 15 Law J. 141—Q. B.

Interest to be paid on a Debt not an Annuity.—Where a bond is given for a previously existing debt, and the condition is, that, if the obligor shall pay interest at 5l. per cent. on the debt during the joint lives of the creditor and his wife, the bond shall be void; but, in case of failure in paying the interest within the times specified, the debt shall become recoverable by the obligee; this is not a grant of an annuity, of which a memorial is required to be inrolled within the stat. 53 Geo. 3, c. 141; for, even if an annuity granted for a bygone consideration is within the statute, in the ordinary case of an annuity the money advanced is irrecoverably gone; whereas, in the above case, the debt is still to be recoverable if the interest is not paid. Besides, this case is one of benefit to the party paying the interest; for, by doing so, he is to be excused payment of the principal; whereas the mischief intended to be prevented by the statute, was the making of improvident bargains by needy persons. Marriage v. Marriage, 1 M. & Gr. 761.

See "Alienation," "Injunction."

APPORTIONMENT.

Dividends payable to a Person at a given Age not apportioned.—Where executors are directed, after a child attains twenty-one, to apply dividends for his support until he attains the age of twenty-five, and he attains twenty-one between the periods of payment of the half-yearly dividends, he is entitled to the whole half-yearly dividend received after the attainment of his majority, and not to an apportioned part only. Campbell v. Campbell, 7 Beav. 452.

ASSIGNMENT—See "Statute of Limitations," "Vendor and Purchaser."

ATTORNEY.

Mortgagee's Attorney's Claim to a Lien on Deeds against the Mortgagor.—After a re-conveyance by a mortgagee to the mortgagor, the attorney of the mortgagee cannot retain the deeds against the mortgagor as a security for the expenses of the transaction due from the mortgagee to the attorney. Wakefield v. Newton, 6 Adol. & Ell. 276.

AWARD

et aside on the ground of ex parte representations.—Principles connected with the Administration of Justice.]—An award will be set aside, where the judgment of the arbitrator has been influenced by representations made by one of the parties in the absence of the other, respecting a question affecting the interest of such other party, even though the interview took place at the request of the arbitrator, and in the presence of an accountant employed by both parties, and even though the absent party, seeking to set aside the award on that ground, has been guilty of a similar impropriety. For it is a plain principle of justice, that a person adjudicating a matter in litigation, in whatever form it may be litigated,—whether in the regularly constituted courts or in arbitrations,—whether before lawyers or merchants,—must never permit one side to use means of influencing his conduct and decisions, which means are not known to the other side; and one party will not be precluded, by a violation of this rule on his own part, from complaining of a similar violation of the rule by the other side; because this is not a matter of mere private consideration between two adverse parties, but a matter concerning the due administration of justice, in which all persons who may ever chance to be litigant, in courts of justice or before arbitrators, have the strongest interest in maintaining that the principles of justice shall be carefully adhered to in every case. Harvey v. Shelton, 7 Beav. 4, 56.

CHARITY—See "Condition," "Mortmain," "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 5.

CHARTER-PARTY—See "Construction," Case 1.

COMPANY—See "Railway," "Trusts."

of a Prosecution for cheating at Cards.—Promissory notes, delivered by one person to another, to induce the latter to forego prosecuting him for cheating at cards, will be decreed to be delivered up, because it would be extremely dangerous to allow a party to be a judge in his own cause, and to determine in his own favor what amount of penalty ought to be paid for a breach of the law committed by another person, notwithstanding he may have suffered by it. Osbaldiston v. Simpson, 13 Sim. 513.

Invalid Consideration.—Compromise of a Prosecution.]—An agreement, founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for an offence, is void, if the offence is of a public nature; as, where it is not only a case off an assault, but also of riot and obstruction of a public officer in the execution of his duty. Keir v. Leeman, 6 Adol. & Ell. 308.

CONDITION.

Condition subsequent divesting in favor of a Charity—Condition against a Wife's Sister residing with her.—

Where a testator devises his real and personal estate, upon trust to lay out the personal estate in the purchase of real estate, and to pay the rents, interest, and dividends to his wife for life, and directs, that, in case the sister of his wife shall reside with, or dwell in the house or place of residence of his wife, or become part of her family, then, for each and every day in which that shall happen, his trustees shall retain, out of the rents, interest, and dividends payable to his wife, a certain sum, and pay the same to a charitable institution; the condition is not illegal, but, being a condition subsequent to divest a vested interest, it ought to be construed strictly; and as the direction to retain, so far as it is intended to operate for the benefit of the charity, is void under the Mortmain Act, it fails altogether. Ridgway v. Woodhouse, 7 Beav. 437.

Whether a Condition annexed to a prior gift extends to a subsequent one.—Where a testator, in the event of a person for whose life he was entitled to an annuity dying before another person, gives a certain direction to his executors, and then adds, in a distinct sentence, that in the opposite event of the death of such other person in the lifetime of the former, for whose life the testator was entitled to such annuity, he gives such annuity to a certain individual, he paying the premiums on a policy of insurance effected on the life of the person for whose life the testator was entitled to such annuity; and on the death of such last-mentioned person (the assured) the testator gives the sum insured to the same individual to whom the testator gives the annuity, that individual will not be entitled to the policy-money in the first-mentioned event; for the gift of the policy-money was not to take effect on the death of the assured, whensoever it might happen; but the contingency of the event secondly mentioned extends to the gift of the policy-money as well as to the gift of the annuity. Leckie v. Hogben, 7 Beav. 502.

See "Covenant."

CONSTRUCTION.

Scope of a clause empowering the making of Alterations in a Charter-party.—Where a charter-party enables the master of the vessel and the agents of the freighter to make such alterations in the charter-party as they may mutually think proper, without prejudice to that agreement, the meaning of this clause is not merely that they may make some small addition to, or deviation from, the voyage specified, such as that the ship may call at intermediate ports; but they are thereby authorised even to enter into an agreement with other persons for an intermediate voyage from the foreign port and back, prior to the homeward voyage from that port contemplated by the charter-party, although to the prejudice of the freighter, in consequence of the delay occasioned thereby. And the freighter is not entitled to have the freight earned by the owners on the intermediate voyage brought into the account. Wiggins v. Johnston, 14 Mes. & W. 606.

Whether a Residue passes, and whether in Trust.—Where a will contains such a passage as this: "My house I give to my brother, as residuary legatees of my remaining property, for the benefit of his children," he will take the residue as well as the house, in trust for his children. Inderwick v. Inderwick, 13 Sim. 652.

Of the Words "Nearest of Kin."—Where a testator, after limiting one-half of his property in trust for his daughter and her issue, directs, that, in the event of his daughter pre-deceasing his wife, without marrying or leaving issue, then, during the life of his wife, his trustees shall accumulate the interest of his residue, so far as not directed to be paid to her; and that, on the decease of his wife, the whole residue be divided into two equal parts, one of which shall be divided between or amongst his nearest of kin, and the other half among the nearest of kin of his wife, who shall have power to apportion the division of the said half as she shall think proper, by any writing to be executed by her in her lifetime; the testator is held to mean the nearest of kin at his death, and not at the death of the wife; and, consequently, if his daughter is his next of kin at the time of his death, and pre-deceases his wife, her personal representative will be entitled to the moiety of the property: for the words "nearest of kin of the testator," in their ordinary legal sense, unexplained and uncontrolled by any other expressions, mean the nearest of kin at the time of his death. And in the above case, in which the will is very inaccurately expressed, there is not enough that can safely be relied on as showing that the testator does not mean his nearest of kin at the time of his death. Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613.

Whether "Instalments" payable for a term constitute "Rent."—Where a person, seized in fee of land and mines under it, executes a deed, purporting thereby to sell and dispose of, grant and convey, the mines for a long term of years, subject to the payment of a certain sum of money to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, by large instalments, by which the whole sum would be paid in a few years; with powers of entry and distress reserved to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for securing payment of such instalments; and with a proviso, that, in case of any of the instalments being in arrear for a certain time, the term shall cease, and the owner of the land, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, shall not be accountable or compelled to refund or repay any of the instalments paid in part of, or towards the purchase-money for the minerals or mines; and the deed contains a covenant enabling the person in whose favor the above term is created to enter upon the lands at a future time, for a term of years, under a certain rent, which, with a power of entry and distress for the same, is reserved to the owner of the land, his heirs and assigns; the instalments payable for the mines are not rent, and therefore not incident to the reversion, and do not pass under the words, "the reversion, rents, issues, and profits," but are personal debts. Lord Hatherton v. Bradburne, 19 Sim. 599.

Bequest of "all but Cash or Monies so called" to a Person "and his Family."—A bequest of "all but cash, or monies so called," to a person "and his family," who are spoken of as living at the date of the will, is a bequest to him and his children then living, as joint tenants, and includes promissory notes, annuities, and foreign bonds. Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 592.

Of an Inclosure Act, as to a Right of Way to carry Coals, &c., from Mines.—See Midgley v. Richardson, 14 Moo. & W. 595.

Whether after-born Children are intended to take under a Separation-deed.—Where, by a deed of separation, reciting that the husband and wife intended to live separate during the remainder of their lives, and containing a covenant by the husband not to visit his wife, a sum of money is limited, in trust, after their decease, for all and every the children of the husband on the body of the wife lawfully begotten, who, being sons, shall live to attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, shall attain that age or be married; and there are children living at the date of the deed; a child born after a subsequent reconciliation is not entitled to a share; for it is obvious, from the whole scope of the deed, that the existence of after-born children was not contemplated. Hulme v. Chitty, 10 Jur. 323—M. R.

Meaning of the Word "payable," in a Limitation over.—Where a testator bequeaths a sum of money in trust for a person for life, and, after his decease, in trust to pay it to his children when and as they shall attain twenty-one; and in case any of them shall die before his, her, or their shares shall become payable, leaving issue, then the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying shall be paid to his, her, or their respective issue; but in case any of the said children shall die before his, her, or their share or shares shall become payable, leaving no issue, then the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying shall be paid to the survivor and survivor of them, at such time or times as his, her, or their original share or shares shall become payable as aforesaid; but in case the tenant for life shall have no child or children, or, having such, they shall all die under age and without issue, then over; the words "his, her, or their share or shares shall become payable" are equivalent to the words "he, she, or they shall attain twenty-one;" and, consequently, the representatives of a child of the tenant for life, who dies in his father's lifetime without issue, after attaining twenty-one, will take a share. Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 561.

Limitation of Personal Estate to the Testator's own right Heirs for ever.—Where a testator gives his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and "estates in the funds," to a person and his first and other sons in tail, and, in default of such issue, to his own right heirs for ever; and empowers his trustees, with the consent of the persons in possession and entitled to the profits thereof, to invest the residue and surplus of his personal estate in the purchase of land, to be settled to the uses declared of the lands and premises previously devised, the heir-at-law, and not the next of kin of the testator, is entitled to his personal estate; for it is obvious that he intends the different kinds of property to go to the same person or persons; especially as he directs that the real property to be purchased shall be settled to the uses declared concerning his real estate and premises, which shows that the same set of uses were intended to apply to all the different kinds of property, freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and funded. De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 10 Jur. 468—V. C. E.

Limitation to the Executors, Administrators, and Assigns.—Under a limitation of a sum of money in the marriage settlement "to the executors, administrators, and assigns" of the wife's mother, the executors of the mother are entitled to take the money and interest as part of her residuary personal estate. Morris v. How, 4 Hare, 599.

See "Administration," "Annuity," "Heir," "Legacies."

CONVENTION INTEREST

depending on surviving the prior taker.—Where a testator gives all his real and personal estate to a person for life, and, after such person's decease, directs his executors to sell and convert the same into money, and to divide and pay the produce to and amongst a class of children; and, in case of the death of any of them in the lifetime of the tenant for life, to pay unto the issue of such child or children, his, her, or their parent's share equally between them; the class to take consists of such children as shall be living at the death of the tenant for life, and the issue of any who shall die in the lifetime of the tenant for life leaving issue, such issue being alive at the death of the tenant for life, and the children who die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, and their issue who die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, are excluded. Beck v. Barn, 7 Beav. 403.

See "Vested," "Heir."

CONTRIBUTION—See "Administration."

CONVERSION.

Necessity for converting a Residue.—Where a testator gives the residue of his property to his wife, after payment of debts and legacies, for her use and benefit during her life, and at her decease to be given to his children equally; and the residue consists of bond debts, leasehold property, and shares in public companies, the wife is not entitled to enjoy it in specie. Johnson v. Johnson, 10 Jur. 279—V. C. B.

So, where a testator gives a residuary estate, in trust for a person for life, and, after the decease of the tenant for life, as to all the said residuary estate, he bequeaths the same to another person; and the residue partly consists of leaseholds which may expire in the life of the tenant for life; he is not entitled to enjoy the leaseholds in specie, although the testator may manifest great anxiety that the tenant for life shall have the full benefit of the income of the residue; for the words show that the remainderman is to take that which is to be enjoyed by the tenant for life; and the leaseholds, if not converted, might expire before the remainder falls into possession. Chambers v. Chambers, 10 Jur. 326—V. C. B.

And where a testator, who has no freehold property, bequeaths the rents and profits, dividends and interest, of all the residue of his property to his wife for life; and, after her decease, he bequeaths the whole of such residue amongst certain other persons, even though they be only collateral relations, the widow is not entitled to the enjoyment in specie during her life of that part of the residue which consists of leaseholds and determinable annuities, but the same ought to be converted. For, as the mere enumeration of the particulars of a residue does not give a specific character to the bequest, so the formal enumeration of particulars of income is nothing more than a gift of the income of the residue, which means income only; a construction which is supported by the words of the gift over—"the whole of such residue." Besides, the words "rents and profits" may refer to real estate which the testator might purchase after the date of his will, where the will was made since the new law came into operation. Pickup v. Alderson, 4 Hare, 624.

So, where a testator gives the residue of his monies, debts, stocks, funds, and securities for money, and all other his personal estate, upon trust to permit his wife to take the interest, dividends, and proceeds during her natural life, and after her decease to pay and apply the same in favor of other persons, and the residue of his estate consists of long annuities, the wife is not entitled to enjoy them in specie, but they ought to be converted into money, and this money to be invested in the 3½ per cent. James v. Gammon, 15 Law J. 217—V. C. B.

Necessity for an immediate Investment in Land.—Where a testator gives all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to invest all such monies as shall be uninvested at the time of his decease, and also all the amount of all mortgages, shares, &c., as can be immediately sold without disadvantage, and otherwise as soon as may be, in the purchase of lands, as they shall judge most advantageous and convenient to the estates he already possessed, and to receive the interest, rents, and profits of his real and personal estate, until converted into real property, and pay the same to a person for life; and, upon her death, he gives all his real and personal estate, until converted into real property, to other parties; and the property is not of a perishable or determinable nature; there is no intention that the conversion should be made immediately; for the word "immediately" is connected with the words "without disadvantage," and the words "as soon as may be" with the words "when they shall judge most advantageous and convenient to the estates I already possess." And, in such case, until invested in the purchase of land, the tenant for life is entitled to the enjoyment of the property in specie. Sparling v. Parkes, 10 Jur. 448—M. R.

Notice of an intention to purchase under an Act of Parliament.—Where a public body are empowered by act of Parliament to take real estate after six months' notice to the owner, and, after the giving of such notice and payment of the purchase-money into court according to the act, he dies, having made his will before such notice was given, his residuary legatee, and not his devisee, will be entitled to the purchase-money. Re parts Hunsdon, 13 Sim. 508.

With the approbation of the parties interested.—An equitable conversion of personal estate into real estate arises by force of a direction to invest personal estate in land, notwithstanding such investment is directed to be made with the approbation of the parties interested in the investment. Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487.

Whether absolute, or dependent on Consent of a prior Testator.—Where a testator gives all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to enjoy the interest, rents, issues, and profits thereof during her life, or otherwise, with her consent and approbation in writing, to sell and dispose of the real and personal estate, and invest the proceeds, and pay the interest to her for life, and, after her decease, to pay certain legacies and divide the residue of the monies to arise from the sale of his real and personal estate between his nephews and nieces living at the death of his wife; the legatees are entitled to their legacies, and the nephews and nieces to the residuary real and personal estate, whether converted in the widow's lifetime or not. Waddington v. Yates, 15 Law J. 223—V. C. B.

See "Executors."

COPYHOLD.

Demise contrary to Custom.—A lease made contrary to the custom of a manor is good against all but the lord; and, even as between the parties to the lease and the lord, the demise against custom is only a ground of forfeiture, which the lord may waive. Doe d. Robinson v. Bousfield, 6 Adol. & Ell. 492.

COPYRIGHT.

Infringement thereof by Extracts.—Where an author has imported into his book, verbatim, or with slight alterations, the material parts of another work, it is a piracy for which the court will interfere by injunction, although the author expressly acknowledges the source from which those parts are taken, and although his book may not be a complete substitute for the other work. Bohn v. Bogue, 10 Jur. 480—V. C. B.

Condemnation.—See "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 5.

COVENANT.

Whether a Covenant is to be qualified by preceding words as a Condition precedent.—Where a person covenants, that he, being provided by the covenantee with certain materials, &c., will complete a work by a given time, and, after some intermediate clauses, a proviso is added, that, in case he shall not complete the work by the time specified, he shall pay (as a fine) a certain sum, not exceeding the sum agreed to be given him for expediting the work, the furnishing him with the materials is not a condition precedent to the right of the covenantee to be paid the amount to be forfeited if the work is not completed in time. Any other construction would lead to the conclusion, that the non-supply of a single article agreed to be provided, however immaterial, would entitle the contractor to receive the sum agreed to be given him for his despatch, without his using expedition; whereas, by treating the covenants as independent, the contractor, if he has really been prevented from completing the work in due time by the neglect of the other party, can obtain full redress, by an action, for all damages occasioned by that neglect. Macintosh v. The Midland Counties Railway Company, 14 Moo. & W. 548.

Joint, and not several.—A covenant with tenants in common, and each and every of them, their and each and every of their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to repair, is a joint and not a several covenant; so that an action on it must be brought by all the tenants in common, or the survivors or survivor of them. Bradburne v. Botfield, 14 Mee. & W. 559.

See "Railway," "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 8.

CUSTOM—See "Prescription."

LONDON, OCTOBER 31, 1846.

In another part of this Journal will be found the reply of the author of the original comments upon the case of Browne v. Houghton (see ante, p. 414) to the papers printed on this subject in our last Number, (ante, p. 426). The importance of the point absolves us from the necessity of making any apology to our readers for giving to the discussion of it so much space in THE JURIST.

We observe that our correspondent X. considers the arguments contained in the communication printed in our last Number as defeating themselves, on the ground that the trust for accumulation in Browne v. Houghton did not, in terms, suspend the vesting of the accumulated fund itself, but directed that the accumulations should from time to time be laid out in the purchase of real estates, to be settled to the same uses as the estates devised. Now, it appears to us that this makes no difference whatever. The primary direction under the trusts for accumulation in Browne v. Houghton was, to accumulate, and invest the rents. The ultimate destination of the accumulated fund was intended, it is true, to be an investment in the purchase of lands, to be settled to the same uses as the lands devised. But we do not see how that prevents the invalid suspension of the vesting of the accumulating fund. A direction to invest the accumulations in the purchase of land could, of course, only operate upon the accumulations actually made. Suppose a succession of minorities, the estate in the land vesting, but not being capable of actual alienation for a period exceeding the period of twenty-one years after the expiration of lives in being. Now, it is declared by the trust itself, that, so long as there is not a cessation of minorities, there shall be accumulation. The direction to invest in lands to be settled to the same uses as the devised lands, has nothing to operate upon until an accumulated fund exists; and the accumulation is to go on by increments, some of which are, of necessity, by the terms of the trusts, not to arise till after the prohibited period. In other words, if the trust could take effect, there would be always, up to the last moment of the last minority, some portion of rents remaining to be accumulated. It follows that the direction to invest in land does not at all prevent the effect of the declaration of trusts for accumulation being, to suspend the vesting of the accumulated fund beyond the period allowed by law.

It is argued, that such trusts as those in Browne v. Houghton are analogous to the usual name-and-arms clause, or the usual shifting clause upon the accession of a particular estate to a tenant in tail. But it is forgotten, that, in provisos such as those referred to, there is never any term inconsistent with their destructibility upon the vesting of the estate tail. They may, it is true, actually subsist longer than the period allowed by the rule of perpetuity, because the estate to which they are attached is not destroyed. But they never are made, in the very terms of their creation, to be dependent for their destructibility upon some event unconnected with the vesting of the estate.

In this, we apprehend, it is, that they are distinguishable from such trusts as those in Browne v. Houghton, which, whether they are precedent or subsequent to the estate tail, are severed from the estate in the land; do not necessarily vest upon the estate vesting; and are expressly made to depend for their vesting, upon events which may postpone that vesting long after the vesting of the estate in the land.

Our correspondent X. refers also to powers of leasing, powers of sale, and the like; and, observing that "every one of these provisions, in its ordinary terms, extends and applies to all the successors to the estates, without limit or restriction," asks whether any one doubts the validity of a lease granted under a power given immediately to the guardians of the infant possessor for the time being under an entail? or whether a title is rejected which depends upon a power of sale exercisable by trustees, without consent or other restriction, and collateral to a strict settlement? The answer is, certainly not. But the addition to the answer is,—none of such powers attempt to affect the vesting of the estate. The one merely purports to carve out of it a limited interest consistent with the title of the owner; and the other to change the quality of the estate. But neither power, as we have observed, attempts to prevent its vesting, or the enjoyment of its fruits. If, indeed, a power of sale during minorities were given, with a direction that the produce of the sale should be held in trust, and accumulated, and to vest only in the first person, who would have been tenant in tail of the land, and have attained twenty-one; that, indeed, would, we apprehend, be a power constructed on the same principle as the trusts in Broune v. Houghton, and bad. But it appears to us that it is quite an inaccurate reasoning, which confounds powers or trusts annexed to a series of limitations in tail, and consistent with the vesting and enjoyment of the estate, with powers or trusts that cannot take effect without absorbing, and withholding from the owner in whom the estate has vested, the enjoyment of the rents of that estate.

It is to be observed, moreover, that it is not, in reality, correct to say that the trusts in Broune v. Houghton follow the estate tail, and are, therefore, destructible ab initio. That may be true of the second, third, and others of the series of trusts; but it is not true of the first trust, which, in fact, does of necessity precede and overrule the first estate of inheritance, if it has any existence at all; since it is limited not to cease till the period when the first tenant in tail shall have power to bar the entail. How can the power of the tenant in tail to bar all remainders and limitations in defeasance of his estate be called in aid to shew that an accumulation is good, which would only be good, if he could stop it, before, by the very terms of the trust and the very nature of his own estate, he has any power to stop it? Clearly, such a trust is precedent in fact, wherever the proviso that creates it may be placed in the instrument.

Correspondence.

THE CASE OF BROUNE v. HOUGHTON. (10 Jur., Part 1, p. 747).

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—Were it not disrespectful towards your correspondent C. S. D., I should simply observe, in reference to his argument contained in your Number for Saturday last, that it furnished its own answer.

C. S. D. states, that Southampton v. Hartford and Broune v. Houghton are "in perfect harmony with each other," on the ground that the true principle of both decisions was, that the vesting of the accumulated fund was intended to be suspended for an indefinite period. I admit this most readily, as regards Southampton v. Hartford, but as respects Broune v. Houghton, it is strange your correspondent has not observed, that the circumstances of that case not only failed to supply any such ground, but were entirely of a contrary description. For, in Broune v. Houghton, the fund was not given indefinitely to the first possessor of the estate who should attain twenty-one, but was directed to be from time to time laid out in purchases of real estate, to be settled to the like uses as the estates devised. Was there any invalid suspense in the vesting of the fund here? Obviously not; for otherwise the very limitations of the estate themselves must have been too remote and void. The limitations being valid, the trusts of the accumulations, which are referential thereto, must be valid also. It follows, consequently, that the only ground for impeaching the validity of the accumulation clause was the indefiniteness of the events contemplated by it. Clearly, this would have been a sufficient objection, unless met by some other circumstance arising upon the will. Such a safeguard, I assert, was, in fact, supplied by the circumstance, that the clause (inasmuch as it did not override the estates tail) was destructible ab initio. And hence arises the clear distinction between the two cases; there being no power of destroying the trust for accumulation in Southampton v. Hartford, because the term which secured the trust preceded the estates tail, and was, therefore, placed beyond all possibility of annihilation, so far as regarded the power conferred by the settlement.

I have assumed, for argument's sake, the correctness of your correspondent's premises, deeming it sufficient to prove, that, even upon his own shewing, the conclusion is untenable. But I beg to observe, that, to my mind, every part of his argument is open to equal, if not graver objection, as wholly at variance with settled principles of law. But, Sir, there is neither time nor space for the discussion of abstract points.

Let me only further observe, that the decision in Broune v. Houghton, if correct, completely upsets nine-tenths of the settlements and wills of realty which have been prepared in Lincoln's Inn within twenty years past. Not only is the clause of accumulation in question the usual one in these cases, but various other provisions forming part of the machinery of strict settlements are, with that clause, either valid or invalid, as standing upon the same footing. Thus, the usual name-and-arms clause, and that for shifting particular estates upon the accession of others,—may, even the ordinary powers of leasing, sale, and exchange,—must stand or fall with the clause of accumulation in Broune v. Houghton. Every one of these provisions, in their ordinary terms, extends and applies to all the successors to the estates, without limit or restriction. I am aware, that sometimes the powers have been confined to tenants in tail entitled by purchase, but the restriction is an antiquated remnant of timid and obscure notions. Let this be the test,—does any one ever see, at the present day, shifting clauses engrafted upon strict settlements expressly limited to the period of lives in being, and twenty-one years? Does any one doubt the validity of a lease granted under a power given indefinitely to the guardians of the infant possessor for the time being, under an entail? Is a title rejected which depends upon a power of sale exercisable by trustees, without consent or other restriction, and collateral to a strict settlement? And wherein consists the distinction, in point of principle and substance, between a proviso for accumulation of rents during minorities (with a view to the purchase of other estates) and a proviso entirely shifting the property from the parties entitled under the settlement, at any time, upon the happening of a given event? Clearly, all these portions of settlements and wills are good or bad together; and that they are valid there can be no doubt, upon the simple and sufficient ground of their being (as an incident of their very existence) capable of destruction.

It is lamentable, Sir, to witness this warfare against methods and schemes of settlement, long sanctioned by experienced minds eminently conversant with the subject, and upon which almost all the family arrangements in the country may be said to rest for validity and efficiency. We have already had one impeachment of conveyancing law, (Brown v. Bamford), which completely unsettled settlements until the late prudent Chancellor came to the rescue, and affirmed the separate use clauses. And now we are told that the other common forms in our settlements will not hold water. Alas! Sir, after all the legislative and judicial innovations of these times, what intelligible remnant will there be of the law of real property?

I am Sir,

Your obedient servant,

Lincoln's Inn, Oct. 26, 1846.

A REPOSITORY OF POINTS IN EQUITY AND CONVEYANCING,

Designed to combine the Advantages of an Abridgment of, and an Index to, the recent Cases, and of an original Statement of the Points established thereby.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Right against the separate estate of a deceased Partner.—Notwithstanding an order of the Court of Review for the consolidation of the estates of two firms, and the receipt by a creditor, under that order, of a dividend out of the aggregate fund, he may, by a suit in Chancery, establish his claim against the separate estate of a deceased partner, to the extent of the balance remaining due to him. Harris v. Farwell, 15 Law J. 445—M. R.

Judgment Debt a Charge on an Annuity.—A judgment debt operates as a charge upon an annuity secured by an assignment of leaseholds, under the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12. Harris v. Davison, 15 Law J. 255—V. C. E.

See "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 4.

DEED—See "Compromise," "Construction."

DEVISE.

To the male Heirs of a Person, and their male Heirs.—Although it may be a rule, that, in order to take under the description of heir male, a person must be heir general and a male descended wholly through males, yet there may be such plain indications of a contrary intention in the testator as to take the case out of such a rule; so that, if a testator devises to the male heirs, if such there be, of a lineal ancestor of his, and their male heirs for ever, and if there be no male heirs or descendants of him, then to a person who is heir general to him through a female, and to his male heirs for ever; and he directs that the males shall take place first, so long as there are any through any descent; and it appears from the will, that the testator knew the pedigree of the family up to the lineal ancestor above mentioned; a person descended from that ancestor entirely through males will be entitled in preference to his heir general descended from him through a female. For the testator, knowing the pedigree, must be taken to have been aware that there was no person answering the description of heir male, in the strict sense; and he could not mean "the heir general, if a male," because there is an express devise to such heir general in default of the male heirs or descendants of the lineal ancestor; and the words "male heirs or descendants" shew that he did not mean "heirs" in the strict sense, and, together with the express preference of males, shew that he means those males who are descended from the lineal male ancestor entirely through males, though they be not heirs general. Doe d. Angell v. Angell, 15 Law J. 193—Q. B.

Executory Devise and Bequest.—Where a testator devises real and personal estate to his daughter, who is his heiress-at-law and next of kin, and her heirs and assigns for ever, "provided she at a proper time intermarries and shall have no children, then and in that case" over; "but nevertheless, providing she shall not have a child or children lawfully begotten in wedlock," he "still" gives all his real and personal property to her, and for her own use during her life, and at her death to be equally divided between her children then living, their heirs and assigns, for ever, with benefit of survivorship, and a limitation over in case the survivor shall die without issue; and the daughter does not marry, she becomes entitled to the fee simple in the real estate, and to the absolute interest in the personalty; but whether under the will, or as heiress-at-law and next of kin, it was not decided. Aspinall v. Audus, 7 Man. & G. 912.

Effect of a Charge in passing the Fee.—14 Mee. & W. 698. A statement of the point decided will be found ante, p. 187.

DOWER.

Election between Dower and Freebench and an Annuity.—Where a testator directs his trustees, out of his real and personal estate, to pay from time to time, but not by way of anticipation, a yearly sum to his wife during widowhood, and, subject thereto, to apply the whole or any part of the income for the benefit of another person; and, in case of the death of that person under age, without issue, in his wife's lifetime, then to pay the said annuity to his wife for her life, for her separate use; and the testator empowers his trustees to carry on his farming concerns, and to let or sell all or any part of the property; and the property is insufficient to raise the annuity in addition to her dower and freebench; the widow must be put to her election between her dower and freebench and the annuity. Loves v. Loves, 10 Jur. 453—V. C. W.

ELECTION—See "Dower."

ESTATE OR INTEREST (QUANTITY OF).

For Life only, and not in Tail.—Limitation over on not leaving Issue.—Where a testator devises an estate to a person for life, and, from and after her decease, to her first child, and to his or her heirs and assigns, for ever; but, if such child shall depart this life under the age of twenty-one years, without leaving issue, then in like manner to the second, third, and every other child of the prior taker, regard being had to the seniority of age and priority of birth of such child and children, and to their several and respective deaths under age, and without issue; it being his will, that, in case of issue, such issue shall inherit the estate, and he thereby gives the same to him or her, and to his or her heirs accordingly; but in case the prior taker shall die without leaving issue of her body, or, having issue, such issue shall die under the age of twenty-one years without leaving issue as aforesaid, then he devises the estate over; the prior taker has only a life estate, the word "issue" in the limitation over meaning "children." Goymour v. Pigge, 7 Beav. 475.

Where Issue are to take by way of Substitution, and not of Succession or Limitation over; their Parents taking Absolute Interests.—Where a testator gives certain shares in an insurance office to his son for life, and, after his decease, to his children; and, in default of such issue, to his daughters and their issue, share and share alike, such issue not to be entitled to take more than their deceased parents' share; and the son dies in the lifetime of the daughters, without ever having had any issue; the daughters take absolute interests, their children being intended to take by way of substitution, and not of succession or limitation over. Hedges v. Harper, 10 Jur. 578—M. R.

Parents and Children taking Life Interests in Succession, notwithstanding a Limitation over, in Default of issue of the Parents.—Where a testator gives each of his daughters an annuity during their lives, and after their respective decease, he gives the same to their children respectively, share and share alike; and, in case any of his daughters shall die without issue, then he directs such annuity to cease and fall into the residue of his estate; the daughters and their children only take life interests in succession. Id. 580.

Parent taking the Absolute Interest, and not a Life Interest, with Remainder to his Children.—Bequest to Heirs of the Body.—Limitation over of Personality on Failure of Heirs.—Where a testator, after bequeathing legacies to several sisters and a brother, wills, that, in the event of either of the sisters dying without heirs, the sum so falling is to be equally divided between the survivors, and, should it so happen that the whole should die without heirs, the sum is ultimately to revert to the estate of the family; but should all or any of them die with heirs of the body, the sum of which they severally die possessed is to be continued to their heirs for ever, and not to revert to the estate; adding, that the sum left to his brother "is his for ever;" the sisters take absolute interests, and not life interests, with remainder to their children. Brooks v. Lord Lake, 10 Jur. 485—V. C. E.

ESTOPPEL—See "Admission."

EXECUTORS.

Improperly permitting Property to be enjoyed in Specie.—Where trustees and executors, who are directed to convert and invest the testator's property, allow it to be enjoyed in specie by the tenant for life, with his concurrence, and, sometime after the death of the tenant for life, they account for the value, and pay the amount into court, they must pay interest thereon, at 4l. per cent., from the death of the tenant for life to the day of such payment. Mackenzie v. Taylor, 7 Beav. 467.

FRAUD.

Person in loco Parentis inducing a Child to do an act for his benefit.—The court will interfere to prevent an act of bounty by a child to the parent or person standing in loco parentis, when, under the circumstances in which they are placed prior to what may be called a complete emancipation of the child, the child is not in such a position as will enable him to form an entirely free and unfettered judgment. And if an act of bounty is done by a child to the parent or person standing in loco parentis just after the child attains the age of twenty-one years, and prior to such complete emancipation, without any benefit moving to the child, the presumption is, that an undue influence has been exercised over the child; and it is incumbent upon the party who endeavours to maintain such a transaction, to shew that that presumption is adequately rebutted. And hence, where a female orphan who has all along resided with her uncle, joins with him in a promissory note for his debt, two months after attaining her majority, while she is still resident at his house, and without having any friend to consult, the court will set aside the transaction. Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551.

GUARDIAN appointed by the Court, although the Ward had appointed one.—The court will refer it to the Master to approve of a guardian for an infant, notwithstanding the infant, being fifteen years of age, has by deed appointed a guardian for himself; and although it does not appear, and it is not suggested, that the guardian so appointed is an unfit person. Coham v. Coham, 12 Sim. 639.

HEIR—HEIRS.

"Heir or Heirs," a Designatio Personarum.—14 Me. & W. 698. A statement of the point decided will be found, ante, p. 187.

Limitation over to the Testator's own Heir, Executor, or Administrator, after a Devise and Bequest to his sole Issue and Heir-at-law.—Where a testator devises and bequeaths his real and personal estate upon trust for a person who, at the date of the will and at the time of the testator's decease, is his sole issue and heir-at-law, and also next of kin; and, in case of his death under a certain age without issue, then upon trust for his (the testator's) own heirs, executors, or administrators, such issue is entitled to the property, under the limitation over, as heir-at-law and next of kin at the death of the testator, and not the person or persons who would be heir-at-law and next of kin at the death of the son; for the son might die in the testator's lifetime leaving children, or the testator might have other children living at his death. And the expression, "my own heirs," might be used with the view of excluding the heir on the maternal side. At all events, there is not sufficient indication of an intention to benefit other persons than the heir and next of kin, at the time of the testator's decease, to justify the court in departing from the general rule. Wilkinson v. Garrett, 10 Jur. 560—V. C. B.

Whether there is a resulting Trust in his Favor.—Where a testator devises all his freehold estates to his nephew (designating him in strong terms of commendation) and his heirs and assigns, "upon the trusts and for the uses following," and then only limits an use of one of his estates, and directs certain sums to be paid out of those estates, and then declares that he leaves his son unprovided for on account of his misconduct, but by a codicil directs that his nephew, his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall allow his son a certain amount for his maintenance; adding a declaration of his determination that his son shall never enjoy any part of his estate, and limiting over his estate from his nephew, in case he shall give up any part of his estate to his son; in such case the nephew takes beneficially; the words "upon the trusts and for the uses following" meaning nothing more than "subject to the trusts and uses following;" and there is no resulting trust in favor of the son and heir as to any part of the estates. Hughes v. Evans, 13 Sim. 496.

See "Construction," Case 9, "Estate."

HEIRS MALE—See "Devise."

HEIRS OF THE BODY—See "Estate."

INJUNCTION

to restrain Proceedings at Law to set aside an Annuity which had been treated as valid in a Chancery Suit.—Where the grantor of an annuity admitted, in his answer to a bill in Chancery, that the annuity was a subsisting charge on his estates, and the decree and proceedings in the suit during a great number of years have treated the annuity as valid, and a large sum of money has been paid on the faith of the admission of the grantor, the grantor's devisee will be restrained from proceeding at law to set aside the annuity as invalid, on the ground that no memorial of it was inrolled, pursuant to the stat. 17 Geo. 3, c. 28, and that the estates were not of greater annual value than the annuity. Roberts v. Madocks, 13 Sim. 549.

See "Railway," "Trusts."

ISSUE—See "Estate," "Survivorship."

INSOLVENCY—See "Alienation."

JOINTURE.

Apportionment of a Jointure on an Estate devised to the Widow, and on a descended Estate.—Where the owner of two estates covenants in his marriage settlement to convey so much of them as shall be of a certain annual value for his wife's jointure, and, by his will, after confirming the settlement, devises both estates to his wife for life, and then executes a deed, which has the effect of revoking his will as to one estate, which consequently descends to his heir-at-law, and he dies without having made any conveyance by way of jointure pursuant to the covenant; in such case, the jointure being originally a charge upon both estates, and the testator not intending that the will should be a satisfaction of the jointure, the jointure remains, as it originally was, a charge on both estates, and therefore must be apportioned rateably on the estate, which passes to the widow under the will, and upon the descended estate. Eyre v. Green, 10 Jur. 384—V. C. B.

JUSTICE.

Principles connected with the Administration of Justice. See "Award," "Compromise."

LEASE—See "Construction," Case 4; "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 10.

LEASEHOLDS.

Apportionment of Fines for Renewal.—Where freeholds and leaseholds for lives or years are devised to a person for life, with a direction to pay the fines and other expenses of renewing the leaseholds out of the rents and profits, or by mortgage of the leaseholds, or by such other ways and means as shall be advisable, there, if the trustees do not take upon themselves to exercise the discretion given them by the will, but the Court is called upon to decide how the burthen of renewal is to be borne, the Court will impose it upon the parties in the proportion of their actual enjoyment of the estate. And, in order to accomplish this, where the tenant for life has not taken upon himself to renew, but the trustees have paid the expenses of renewal out of rents accumulated during the minority of the tenant for life, the court will direct the tenant for life to keep down the interest, and to give security for the payment of a part of the principal proportionate to the estimated value of his interest, without prejudice to the question, whether he may or may not be liable, according to the eventual duration of his life, to less or more than the sum for which security is given, and to the consequent question, whether he is to have a lien on the estate for what he may have overpaid, or must give further security. Jones v. Jones, 10 Jur. 516—V. C. W.

(To be continued).

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—John Penrice Bell, of Cheltenham, Gloucestershire; Walter Henry Moore, of Woodbridge, Suffolk.

The Queen has been pleased to grant unto Thomas Coxhead Marsh, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, her royal license and authority to take and use the surname of Chisenhale, in addition to and before that of Marsh.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 7, 1846.

THERE seems to be just now a great effort made to stir the mind of the general public, to the contemplation of the horrors of conveyancing; and even the columns of newspapers have become the arena on which the champions and antagonists of the feudal conveyancing are giving battle.

In a warfare of this kind, there is already, and there will be to a still greater extent, misrepresentation and exaggeration,—misrepresentation of the causes of mischief, and great exaggeration of the magnitude of the mischief itself; misrepresentation or misunderstanding of the working of proposed alterations, and consequent exaggeration of their beneficial effect.

The present pet notion of conveyancing reformers, is to assimilate the conditions of land, at least as regards making a title to it, to those of money in the funds; that is, to have something in the nature of a registry, on which shall be inscribed the names of the owners of land, and the description of the lands; and to make the transfer of any lands described in such books from the names in which they stand, into other names, have the effect of passing absolutely to the transferees the whole interest, both legal and beneficial. It is thought, that, by such a scheme, immense simplification will be effected; and, to some extent, no doubt, it would simplify the process of transferring land, because it would abolish all inquiries as to the devolution of the legal estate, beyond the single inquiry into the fact of the particular person purporting to be the vendor, appearing on the register as owner. That would be sufficient evidence of his ownership, and the transfer of the property from his name into that of the purchaser, would be all that would be required to transfer the simple and entire fee. There would, however, remain behind, all the complicated dispositions of the beneficial interest that the manifold wants of mankind dictate, and with those the proposed scheme of registration by means of transfer books can have nothing to do. Take, for instance, the case of an estate in land conveyed to trustees upon trust for a husband for his life, remainder to the wife for her life, remainder in tail to the first and other sons, remainder to the daughters, as tenants in common. The husband and wife are living, and the eldest son, having attained his majority and married, has barred the entail on his marriage, and has re-settled his newly-acquired estate to himself and his wife, and the issue of the marriage. He has also mortgaged his life estate; and one may suppose, without any exaggeration, various other dispositions of, or incumbrances upon, the beneficial interest in the land.

Now, the next personage in this conveyancing drama, will be the purchaser of the partial beneficial interest of one of the beneficial owners,—say, of the mortgagee of the life interest of the son, the tenant for life in remainder expectant upon the decease of his father and mother. Now, it is plain, that it is of no use for him to apply to the trustees for a transfer. They can only transfer to the purchaser of the whole fee, and of course their trust deed will have taken care to provide that they shall not sell, without the consent of the owners, certain specified beneficial estates. All that the intending purchaser can do, therefore, with regard to the purchase of the limited beneficial interest that he is about to acquire, will be, to take a conveyance of it from its apparent owners, taking care to ascertain that such apparent owners deduce a good title; and taking care, also, to give proper notices to the legal owners, the persons in whose names the land stands. In fact, the investigation of the equitable title must be exactly what it is now, the only difference being, as to getting a complete title, that notice to the acknowledged and visible owners, whose names are in the transfer books, will be substituted for a conveyance from the legal owners; and the necessity of deducing the title to the legal estate will be abolished. In fact, the result will be simply to render these modes of acquiring title to real estate precisely similar to, and neither more nor less burdensome than, those of acquiring title to personal estate.

Now, those who are much engaged in conveyancing business connected with mercantile transactions,—those particularly who are much in the habit of being consulted upon and preparing mortgage deeds for borrowers in the middle and trading classes of life,—are well aware that there are few transactions which raise more intricate and difficult questions as to title, than sales and mortgages of equitable interests in personal estate vested in trustees. They possess, in common with transactions relating to real estate, the difficulties arising out of those inquiries (sometimes of great intricacy) necessary for establishing representation or devolution of title to the beneficial interest, by kindred or by purchase. And though they are free from the inquiries necessary in regard to real estate, as to the devolution of title to the legal estate, they are obnoxious to all those hyperdifficult questions of implied or constructive notice to the legal owners of the property purchased, which have made it difficult for judges to lay down any rules, and still more difficult for professional men to say, a priori, when any particular state of facts falls within such rules as the judges have ventured to lay down.

Of course, in these arguments, we are assuming that it is not proposed to deprive owners of particular beneficial interests, from dealing with those interests as their wants and wishes may dictate; and of course, therefore, we assume that beneficial owners would not, under any reformed system, be precluded from preventing the trustees, the registered owners, from selling the land on which they claim their varied interests, without the consent of all, or of certain of the beneficial owners. To suppose otherwise would be to suppose an extent of absurd despotism, of which we do not suspect even conveyancing reformers. Taking these assumptions for granted, the increase of facility of selling land would be by no means so great as is anticipated; because trustees would only be able to sell pursuant to their trust deeds, that is, in almost all cases, with the consent of a considerable number of beneficial owners; so that the sale would depend, just as it depends now, upon the establishment of the right to sell, or, in other words, of the title of the equitable owners.

We are not desirous of ridiculing, or even, to use a familiar expression, of throwing cold water upon the transfer-book system, or upon any other proposed system of reform in the law of real property, and in the mode of conveying property. All that we wish to do is, to guard our readers, and through them the public, against imagining that any system, purporting to deal merely with the visible legal ownership of land, can wholly remove complexity and expense from transactions relating to the sale of land; and to remind them, that the real sellers of land always are, and always must be, while the institutions of the country are free, the beneficial owners; and that while there remains, as there must always remain in a commercial community, a possibility of complicated interests in the beneficial ownership of land, no rules affecting the mere legal ownership can go very far in rendering the transfer of property, in the aggregate, simple and inexpensive.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Nov. 4.—Lord Denman, C. J., said, “At the sittings in banc after last term, we intimated that we should, in this term, postpone the Special Paper till the sittings in banc after term. We shall accordingly take the New Trial Paper on Tuesdays and Fridays during the term, instead of the Special Paper. We do not feel justified in postponing the Crown Paper, and shall therefore take it as usual, on Wednesdays and Saturdays.”

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, by her Majesty's command, has been sworn of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council.

The Queen has been pleased to make the following legal appointments:—James Simms, Esq., to be Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature in the island of Newfoundland; Edward Mortimer Archibald, Esq., to be her Majesty's Attorney-General for that island; and Charles Douglas Stewart, Esq., to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the island of St. Vincent.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—Joseph Morton Barret, of Otley, in the county of York; Edward Lane Swatman, of Lynn, in the county of Norfolk.

LOCAL ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—By a bill passed last session, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 106), notice must be given, on or before the last day of the present month, where it is intended to make an application to Parliament for an act for the establishment of any waterworks, or for draining, paving, cleansing, lighting, or otherwise improving any town, district, or place, or for making, maintaining, or altering any burial ground or cemetery, or for continuing, altering, or enlarging any of the powers or provisions contained in any act or acts relating to any of the purposes aforesaid. A notice in writing of such intention to apply to Parliament in the next ensuing session for an act for any of the above objects, “shall, on or before the last day of November, or in case such day shall fall on a Sunday, then on the day preceding, in each year, be sent or delivered to the office of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings; and such notice shall be signed by the promoters of such intended work, or by some person duly authorized on their behalf, and shall be accompanied by a statement in duplicate of the intended objects and provisions of the proposed act, and with such plans, sections, books of reference, or other documents, if any, as are required by the standing orders of either House of Parliament to be deposited in any public office.” The commissioners, on or before the 1st March in each year, are to appoint an officer to make local examination, and to report thereon to Parliament. The surveying officer to be appointed is to give public notice of his intention, and may summon persons and examine them on oath on the intended local act. The expenses of the inquiry are to be defrayed by the promoters of the undertaking. This act was passed, according to the preamble, to give facilities for procuring more complete and trustworthy information previous to inquiries before either House of Parliament on applications in certain cases for local acts.—Times.

A REPOSITORY OF POINTS IN EQUITY AND CONVEYANCING,

Designed to combine the Advantages of an Abridgment of, and an Index to, the recent Cases, and of an original Statement of the Points established thereby.

(Concluded from p. 441).

LEGACIES.

Where a Lapsed Legacy is undisposed of.—Where a testator, after giving the residue of his property in trust for certain persons, in equal fourths, wills, that, in case the net residue shall be found to exceed a certain amount, that amount only shall be applicable to the trusts before declared; and he bequeaths all the residue of his property beyond that amount amongst certain other persons; and the residue does exceed that amount; and one of the first-mentioned legatees dies in the testator's lifetime, his share will not pass as residue to such other legatees, but is property undisposed of by the will: for the words of the will must determine the rights of the parties, although, according to this construction, if the residue were less than such amount, and all the first-named legatees pre-deceased the testator, the other legatees would take nothing, which cannot be supposed to have been the intention of the testator. Green v. Pertwee, 16 Jur. 538—V. C. W.

Interest accrued during Minority.—Where a testator gives a sum of money amongst certain children, to be paid at the age of twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship, and he wills that his trustees shall and may apply the interest towards their maintenance and education until their respective shares shall become payable, and that the trustees may apply the whole or any part of the principal at any earlier period than the same would become vested or payable, for the advancement of the infants; the representatives of a child who dies under age are not entitled to the interest accrued during his minority. Skaipe v. Stewart, 10 Jur. 299—V. C. E.

Charged on Real Estate.—Where a testator gives his residuary real and personal estate to his executors, and charges them with the payment of his legacies, this will amount to a charge of such legacies on the real estate, even though an annuity be formally charged by him on his real estate. Cross v. Kennington, 15 Law J. 167—M. R.

Setting off a Legacy to a Wife against her Husband's Debt.—Where the husband of a legatee has agreed with the executors to set off the legacy against a debt of equal amount due from him to the testator, and he and his wife have signed a receipt for the legacy, but have not released the executors, and it does not appear that they have delivered up the note to him; his wife, if she survives him, will be entitled to the legacy, in consequence of there being no release by, or payment to, the husband. Harrison v. Andrew, 13 Sim. 595.

See "Administration," "Annuity," "Mortmain," and "Survivorship."

MAINTENANCE—See "Legacies," Case 2.

MANOR.

Evidence of Reputation as to a Boundary of a Manor.—Evidence of reputation is admissible as to the boundary of a reputed manor, that is, of a quondam manor, as well as of a subsisting manor; inasmuch as conversations during the existence of the manor might be retained in memory since; and, further, the supposed discourse, which may be proved as reputation, is not confined to tenants, but may proceed from any person residing in the neighbourhood, and engaged in talking upon the subject. Doe d. Molesworth v. Sleeman, 10 Jur. 568—Q. B.

MARRIED WOMEN.

Wife's Acquiescence in her Husband's Receipt of her separate Property.—If a husband and wife join in appointing a person to receive the rents of an estate devised to her separate use by a member of her family, and such person pays the rents into a bank to the husband's account, although that bank be the bank of the wife's family, and not the bank of the husband, and the husband all along draws cheques for the money, some of which he applies to his own purposes, without any payment being made to the wife, or any claim being made by the wife to any part of the money, and at the death of the husband a large balance remains in the bank, it belongs to the husband's estate, and not to the wife; for she must be deemed to have acquiesced in his having the absolute dominion over the property; and nothing that takes place after his death can affect the balance which existed at his death, so as to give the wife a right to it after she acquiesced in his absolute dominion over the rents received in his lifetime, which constitute that balance; the question being, whether, at the death of the husband, the fund was his. Beresford v. The Archbishop of Armagh, 13 Sim. 643.

Restraint of Anticipation of Property bequeathed for Separate Use.—Where property is bequeathed to trustees, in trust to pay the income unto such person or persons, and for such intents and purposes, and in such manner, as a married woman, when and as the same shall become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, shall, notwithstanding coverture, direct or appoint; and, in default of any such direction or appointment, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, contracts, or interference of her husband; and her receipts, notwithstanding coverture, are to be good and sufficient discharges to the trustees for such income; the limitation in default of appointment does not enable the married woman to anticipate. And the case does not depend on the form of the receipt clause. The feme is only to have a power of disposing of the income "when and as the same shall become due," and "not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation." In default of such a disposition as is authorised, the income is to be paid into her own hands. Brown v. Bamford, 10 Jur. 447—L. C.

See "Power of Appointment."

MISTAKE.

Substituting a new Charge, without extinguishing the former one.—Far v. Sheriffe and Dykes v. Farr, 4 Hare, 512. A statement of the point will be found ante, p. 198.

MORTGAGE.

Right of a Mortgagor's Surety to an Assignment of the Mortgage.—A mortgagor's surety, who has been obliged to pay off the mortgage debt, cannot compel the mortgagee to assign the mortgage to him, unless he pays off a further sum advanced by the mortgagee on the security of the same estate; for the right of the surety to stand in the place of the mortgagee is subject to the right of the mortgagee to make a further loan to the mortgagor. Williams v. Owen, 13 Sim. 597.

Bar to an Equity of Redemption by the Statute of Limitations.—An assignment of a mortgage, to which the mortgagor is not a party, but which recites that the equity of redemption has not been barred, is not such an acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title as to save the right of redemption from being barred by the Statute of Limitations; for the acknowledgment mentioned by the act is one that is made to "the mortgagor or some person claiming his estate," not to a person claiming the estate of the mortgagee. Lucas v. Dennison, 13 Sim. 584.

Improper exercise of a Power of Sale.—Although a mortgagee may have an express power of selling the mortgaged premises, without the consent or concurrence of the mortgagor, his executors or administrators, and without even being under any express obligation to give notice of sale, yet, if he exercises the power in spite of an offer of payment of principal, interest, and costs, within a few days from the time of such offer, and in such a way as not to obtain so large a price as might otherwise be reasonably obtained, the sale will be set aside, with costs, against the mortgagee. Matthie v. Edwards, 10 Jur. 347—V. C. B.

Deposit of Title-deeds creating a Mortgage upon the whole Property.—Where title-deeds are expressed to be deposited until payment of a debt, an equitable mortgage of the land is thereby created, and not a mere lien on the deeds themselves; and, prima facie, such a deposit creates an equitable mortgage upon the whole of the property comprised in them; so that, on those who contend the contrary lies the burden of proof that it does not. Ashton v. Dalton, 10 Jur. 451—V. C. B.

Sale, after a Foreclosure, for less than the debt, and claim for the balance.—Where a mortgagee forecloses an estate, and afterwards sells it for a less sum than the amount of his debt, he will not be allowed to prove for the deficiency under a bond for the debt, and a decree for the administration of the debtor's estate. Lockhart v. Hardy, 10 Jur. 532—M. R.

See "Admission," "Attorney," "Specific Performance."

MORTMAIN.

Bequest for the Establishment of a Charitable "Receptacle," with a Limitation over.—Where a testator gives the residue of his personal property upon trust for the establishment or institution of a charitable receptacle, if the same can be done, for a number of poor people; but if no such institution can be conveniently established, he requests that the property be disposed of in charitable donations; such a bequest is void under the Statute of Mortmain, on the ground that the primary and direct object is the acquisition of a dwelling-place for the charitable purpose, and it is only in case no such institution can be conveniently established, and not in case it cannot be lawfully established, that the bequest over is to take effect. Attorney-General v. Hodgson, 10 Jur. 300—V. C. E.

Charity Legacies payable out of the proceeds of shares in a company.—Where, by an act of Parliament or a deed, by which a gas light or dock company is constituted, it is provided that the shares in the land and other property and profits of the company shall be deemed personal estate, and transmissible as such, and not of the nature of real estate; and that upon a dissolution of the company, its property shall be sold, and the proceeds divided amongst the shareholders; and a shareholder, whose personal estate, exclusive of the shares, is insufficient to pay his legacies in full, gives legacies to charities, the shares do not come within the operation of the Statute of Mortmain, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36; and, consequently, the charity legacies ought not to abate, so far as they are payable out of the proceeds of the shares. For, a shareholder in such a company, whilst he continues to hold his shares, has no distinct or separate right to the land or any part of it: he is, indeed, interested in the employment of the land; but he cannot proceed against the land directly for anything which is due to him, or make any part of the land his own, in part satisfaction of any demand or claim he may have as a shareholder. And if, upon a dissolution or determination of the joint concern, he becomes an owner of any part of the land, it is only upon a new transaction, and by acquiring a new title and right as purchaser; and upon his death nothing descends to his heirs. Sparling v. Partes, 10 Jur. 448—M. R.

See "Condition."

PARENT AND CHILD, or person in loco parentis and child.

See "Fraud."

PARTITION

of Copyholds held in Joint-tenancy.—An agreement between two devisees in joint tenancy of copyholds and legatees under a will, to divide between them the real and personal estates of the testator, pointing out the parts to be taken by each, and acted on up to the time of the decease of one of them, by an occupation in severalty, will be deemed an agreement for a partition, and decreed to be specifically performed; although the survivor avows, in his answer, that the agreement was only intended as a suspension of the joint tenancy during the life of the deceased; and although there is a stipulation, that, if either party should disannul the agreement, he should pay a certain sum to the other. Bolton v. Ward, 4 Hare, 530.

PARTNERSHIP.

Real Estate let to a firm by two of the members of that firm.—Although real property, purchased by two partners, and used by them for partnership purposes, is to be considered in equity as personalty, yet, if it is afterwards used by a new firm, consisting of the first firm and of a third person, and a rent is paid for it by the new firm to the persons who constituted the first firm, it is to be considered as real estate of the latter. Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 548.

POLICY.

Right to surrender a Policy of Insurance effected by the grantee of an annuity on the life of the grantor.—Where it is stipulated, that, in case the grantor of an annuity for his own life shall repurchase it, and shall, at the time of making such repurchase, by notice in writing to the grantee, elect to take any policy which may be effected on the life of the grantor by the grantee, at the grantee's expense, and which may be then vested in the grantee, the grantee shall assign the same, but that it shall not be incumbent on the grantor to effect, or renew, or keep on foot any such policy; the grantee has no right to surrender the policy, and appropriate the value thereof, after notice given by the grantor of his intention to repurchase, and thereby make it impossible to carry the agreement into effect. Hawkins v. Woodgate, 7 Beav. 555.

POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

Construction of the words "during the coverture, and notwithstanding the same."—Where a pre-nuptial settlement gives the intended wife a power of appointment "at any time or times thereafter during the coverture, and notwithstanding the same," such power cannot be exercised by her when a widow, or during any other coverture than that in contemplation of which such settlement was made. Morris v. Hovess, 4 Hare, 599.

Whether executed.—Where a testatrix, having a power of appointment in favor of her children, gives and bequeaths, and, by virtue of every power enabling her in that behalf, appoints all the property of or to which she is, or at the time of her death shall be, possessed or entitled, or have power to dispose, to trustees, upon trust, after payment of all her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, to invest the residue thereof in their names in the public funds, or upon government or real securities, with power to vary such funds or securities, and to apply the interest and dividends for the benefit of her children, as therein mentioned; and the trustees of the will are the same persons who are trustees of the settlement creating the power; and the funds which are the subject of the power are already invested in stock in their names; and they have the same power by the settlement to vary the funds or securities as that which is given by the will; the will is not an execution of the power: for the funds which are the subject of the power are not subject to the payment of debts or funeral or testamentary expenses; and what the testatrix gives, in the case above mentioned, she gives as residue; and if she intended her will to be an appointment of the funds comprised in the settlement, the powers of investment given by the will would be unnecessary as to those funds. Clogston v. Walcott, 13 Sim. 523.

POWER OF SALE—See "Conversion," Case 8, "Mortgage," Case 2.

PREScription

to work mines under houses.—A prescription or custom in a manor to work mines under houses, without making compensation for any damage occasioned to such houses, is bad, as being unreasonable. Hilton v. Granville, 1 Dav. & M. 614.

PRESUMPTION

as to a Grant of land between a high road and other land which was granted.—As between the grantees of different lands at different times from the same lord of a manor, no presumption arises that a strip of land between a high road and the land which was unquestionably comprised within the grant to one of them, was granted to that one. White v. Hill, 6 Adol. & Ell. 487.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Promissory Note given to Bankers for a floating balance, placed by them to the credit of the principal.—Where a person joins as surety in a promissory note, as a security for the floating balance which may at any time be due from the principal to his bankers, the surety is properly answerable for no more at any time than the floating balance may amount to; and the bankers have no right to give the principal credit in their books for the amount of the note, when he has overdrawn his account less than that amount; for the consequence of this would be, that the surety, even though the principal may not have drawn for the amount, might all at once be made answerable for it, since the principal has the immediate benefit of it, having a right to draw for it at once. Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551.

RAILWAYS.

Injunction to restrain a Breach of a Covenant to stop at a Refreshment Station.—"Trains sent Express."—Where, in a lease by a railway company, it is declared to be the intention of the parties, that, in consideration of the outlay to be incurred by the lessee in the erection of refreshment-rooms, the company shall give every facility to the lessee for enabling him to obtain an adequate return, by means of the profits of the refreshment-rooms, and that all trains carrying passengers, not being goods trains, or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the company, which shall pass the station where such refreshment-rooms are situate, either up or down, shall, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accident, stop there for the refreshment of passengers for a certain period; and the company thereby undertake not to do any act contrary to the above intimation; this is a legal binding covenant, the specific performance of which the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to enforce by injunction; as, at law, the covenantees could only recover such speculative damages as a jury might give them in repeated actions against the company; and, for the purpose of a motion for an injunction, the company must be regarded as private individuals, and cannot be heard to excuse a breach of the covenant upon the ground of the convenience of the passengers. And if any trains regularly run by direction of the company, without stopping at the station for the purpose of affording the passengers an opportunity of taking refreshment, and such trains do not differ from the ordinary trains, except in the rate of travelling, they are not trains "sent express or for special purposes," within the exceptions in the covenant, although they are called "express trains" in the time table. Rigby v. The Great Western Railway Company, 10 Jur. 488—V. C. W.

But where the right to an injunction would depend on a disputed legal question, which the court will not decide, the court will not grant an injunction while such question continues to be in dispute, if the company undertake to pay such sum of money as may be assessed for damages for the violation of the covenant, to be ascertained by the court, so as to avoid the possibility of inflicting a wrongful and irreparable loss upon the company by means of an injunction, and yet avoid the difficulty of bringing numerous actions at law. Id. 561—L. C.

Agreement of a Solicitor to exempt the Provisional Committee from a personal liability for Costs.—An agreement between a solicitor of a company and the provisional committee, that they shall not be personally responsible to him for costs, but that the costs shall be paid out of the deposits, is not illegal, on the ground that it may diminish the security of the company, as cestuis que trust in regard to the conduct of the provisional committee. For, prima facie, trustees have a right to be indemnified by their cestuis que trust before they incur any liability. Parsons v. Spooner, 15 Law J. 155—V. C. W.

REMOTENESS.

Alternative Limitation in case of dying "without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid."—Where a testator devises real and personal estate, in trust for a person for life, and, after her decease, in trust for all and every such one or more of her child or children, lawfully begotten, as she shall appoint; and, in default of appointment, in trust for all and every her child and children, and to their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever; but in case she should die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, then to her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever; the words "as aforesaid" shew, that by "issue" the testator means "children;" and the limitations in default of appointment are alternative limitations to the child or children, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, if the tenant for life should leave any child or children; but, if she should not leave any child or children, then to her heirs, executors, and administrators; and, consequently, the limitation over is not too remote. Walker v. Patchell, 1 M., Gr., & Scott's C. B. Rep. 652.

Limitation over of personal estate, in default of issue.—Where a testator gives shares in an insurance office to his son, his executors, administrators, and assigns, his son paying the profits of certain of them to his daughters, during their lives, and after their decease their shares to return to his son and his issue; and, in default of such issue of his son, he gives all the shares to his daughters and their issue, share and share alike; the limitation over to the daughters is void for remoteness; for in this clause there is nothing to shew, that the testator by the word "issue" means "children;" and, therefore, the word cannot be so construed, although, in a preceding limitation over, it does mean children. Hodges v. Harper, 10 Jur. 578—M. R.

SETTLEMENT.

Voluntary limitation of the wife's property in favor of her brothers and sisters.—Where, by a pre-nuptial settlement, an estate, the property of the intended wife, is limited, in case she should die without children, to trustees, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst her brothers and sisters; and afterwards the husband agrees to sell the estate, and he and his wife join in conveying it to a purchaser, by deed and fine, and the wife dies without issue, the limitation in favor of her brothers and sisters is voluntary, and void as against the purchaser, under the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. Cotterell v. Homer, 13 Sim. 506.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE of an Agreement to bar an Entail and re-settle an Estate.—

Right of Redemption.—Where a father, tenant for life, and a son, tenant in tail, join in mortgaging an estate for a debt of the son, under an agreement between them to bar the entail and re-settle the estate, as to the remainder after the death of the father and mother, in case the father shall be obliged to pay any part of the interest upon the mortgage, or the son shall not pay off the mortgage by a certain day, and the father shall then pay it off and release the son therefrom, to the use of the father in fee, he covenanting to give the son or his issue a certain proportion of the estate, or of the value of such proportion thereof; and the father neither pays off the debt, nor releases the son from it; in such case, the court will not, after the father's death, enforce the specific performance of the agreement, although the father has paid the interest until his death, and his devisees have paid off the mortgage; for as, in the case supposed, the father does not release the son from the debt, a state of things existed for which the agreement did not provide, and as to which it was inoperative. And as the court will not decree a specific performance, the original rights of the parties, irrespective of the agreement, remain, and, therefore, the son is entitled to redeem the estate upon repayment of the mortgage debt and the interest. Playford v. Playford, 4 Hare, 546.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Bar of a collateral security for a debt.—Assignment of debts and legacies.]—Where property is conveyed to a creditor, upon trust to sell for payment of his debt, and then of the debt of a prior creditor; and the prior creditor and the debtor jointly and severally covenant to pay the debt of the subsequent creditor; and the debtor, as a security to the prior creditor, executes a deed appointing the prior creditor his attorney to receive certain debts due to him and certain expectant legacies for the prior creditor's own benefit; and the subsequent creditor sells the property not so long as twenty years before the filing of a bill by the prior creditor, and for a less sum than the amount of his debt; and more than twenty years elapse from the execution of the subsequent security to the prior creditor, without any acknowledgment by the debtor of the prior debt; that deed operates as a valid assignment in equity of the debts and legacies due to the debtor, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations. For, as the trust existed up to the time of the sale, and within twenty years, the debt due to the prior creditor is not barred by the statute; and as the debt exists, and the subsequent deed executed as a security to the prior creditor is only a collateral security for the debt as primarily secured by the trust, such subsequent deed continues to be operative. Bennett v. Cooper, 10 Jur. 507—M. R.

Receipt of rent under a lease.—Where a person not entitled has received rent for twenty years, under a valid lease, made prior to the act, the party rightfully entitled to the land in reversion would be barred by the 9th section of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, if his right were not saved by the 15th section; but it is saved by the 15th section, if asserted by an action within five years from the passing of the act; for "the possession and receipt of the profits of the land" is not adverse to the party rightfully entitled, since the possession and receipt were under a valid lease; and the words "receipt of rent," in this section, do not refer to rent reserved on a lease. Doe d. Angell v. Angell, 15 Law J. 193—Q. B.

Right of a person entitled subject to a tenancy at will.—The Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, s. 7, as to the accrual of a right of a person entitled subject to a tenancy at will, does not apply where the tenancy at will was determined before the passing of the act. Doe d. Evans v. Page, 1 Dav. & M. 601.

STATUTE 32 Hen. 8, c. 9—See "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 6.

STATUTE 27 Eliz. c. 4—See "Settlement."

STATUTE 1 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 12.

The stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 12, does not apply to a case of a mere equitable estate for life, where, in consequence of the disclaimer of a person named as trustee for the life of the cestui que trust, the legal estate has devolved on the heir, not by devise, but by descent. Heming v. Archer, 7 Beav. 515.

STATUTE 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13—See "Debtor and Creditor."

SURVIVORSHIP.

Word "Survivor" referring to the time of the death of a prior taker.—"Issue" meaning "Children."—Where a testator directs his trustees to sell real estate when they shall think proper and convenient, and he devises and bequeaths such real estate, and the proceeds thereof, and his personal estate, in trust for a person for life, and, after his decease, to convey and pay the same to the children of that person, or the survivors of them, their several heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for ever, when and as they shall attain twenty-one; but, in case such person shall die without leaving any children him surviving, or, there being such, they shall all die under twenty-one and without issue, then upon trust to convey and pay the same property to the children of two other persons and the survivors of them, share and share alike; but, in case any of such children shall be then dead, leaving issue, such issue shall have the original share of the father or mother of such issue so dying, and the share or shares to which such father or mother may be entitled by survivorship or otherwise: in such case the word "issue" means "children," being so explained by the word "children," and by the expressions "father or mother of such issue;" and the survivorship is to be referred to the period of division, namely, the death of the tenant for life; and the property is given to the children of the two persons before mentioned living at the date of the will, and those born after that date and before the period of division; with a proviso for survivorship between them in case any should die before the period of division, without leaving children; and with a proviso substituting for the original legatees the children of such of them as should die before the period of division, leaving children, and giving to such children absolute interests, so that, if they die before the period of division, their representatives will take. Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare, 536.

Word "Survivor" referring to the time of the decease of a prior Taker.]—Where a testator bequeaths money upon trust for his wife for life, remainder for his daughter for life, and, upon her demise, the interest to be appropriated for the use of any of her children, until they reach the age of twenty-one years, and then the principal sum to be paid to the survivor or survivors of the children of his daughter, share and share alike, the survivorship refers to the time of the death of the daughter; so that a child who attains twenty-one, but dies before the daughter, takes nothing. Turing v. Turing, 10 Jur. 366—V. C. E.

See "Contingent Interest," "Vested Interest."

TRUST.

Where a Debt due from a Trustee is a Specialty Debt.]—Although a mere breach of trust creates only a simple contract debt, yet, where it is declared by a deed under seal, that a person, his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall stand possessed of certain funds upon trust for another; a sum due to the cestui que trust from the estate of the trustee, in respect of such funds made use of by him, is a specialty debt. Wood v. Hardisty, 10 Jur. 486—V. C. B.

Mortgage of Shares by a Trustee.—Notice of a Trust.]—Where a person buys shares in a company in the name of another person, and does not give notice to the company that the latter is a trustee of those shares for him; and the trustee mortgages them, and the mortgagee gives notice of the mortgage to the company, the mortgagee is entitled to a priority over the cestui que trust; the trustee's knowledge of the trust not amounting to notice to the company, although he, as a shareholder, is a partner in the company. Martin v. Sedgwick, 10 Jur. 463—M. R.

Direction to invest in joint names of husband and wife, in trust for their son.]—If a person directs his bankers to invest a sum of money in stock in the joint names of himself and his wife, in trust for his son; and the bankers return an answer, that, as the Bank of England object to have any trusts in their books, the bankers had simply invested the money in the names of himself and his wife; and he afterwards directs them to invest another sum in the same manner, and he deals with the two sums as his own property, and the dividends thereon are carried to his account; on his decease in the lifetime of his wife, the stock forms part of his assets, and does not belong to his wife as survivor, nor to his son as a cestui que trust. Smith v. Ward, 15 Law J. 105—V. C. E.

Society incorporated for public purposes.]—Where property is vested in a society incorporated by royal charter, for the accomplishment of purposes of a general and public or political nature, (as for the formation of a colony or settlement), and, according to the constitution of the society, certain other bodies, although interested in any surplus that may remain from time to time, after those purposes are accomplished, are not entitled to control the exercise of the powers which are given to the society for such purposes; the Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction, upon the application of those bodies, to determine upon the propriety of the expenditure which has been made by the society, even though the society may have erroneously admitted itself to be a mere trustee for those bodies. The Skinners' Company v. The Irish Society, 7 Beav. 593.

Injunction against using a Scotch Kirk as a Free Church.]—Where, according to the intention of the founders of a place of worship, it was to correspond in all respects with a church situated in Scotland, subject to the jurisdiction of a Scotch presbytery, and in strict communion with the Established Church of Scotland, the Court of Chancery will prevent it from being used as a place of worship in connexion with the Free Church of Scotland. Attorney-General v. Welsh, 4 Hare, 572.

Words of Recommendation.]—Where a testator, after bequeathing certain specific chattels to the use of his wife, adds, that they "may be finally appropriated as she pleases, with a sum" of money, which, "however," he "recommends her to divide" among certain persons, no trust is created in their favor; because she would not have the power to appropriate this sum as she pleases, if she were bound to comply with the recommendation in the will. The different parts of the will can only be reconciled by holding, that the testator, while he recommends the money to be appropriated in a particular way, leaves it to his wife's discretion to adopt his recommendation, or not. And the court will not carry the doctrine of the cases, in which words of recommendation have been held to create a trust, any further than it has been already carried. White v. Briggs, 15 Law J. 182—L. C.

See "Construction," Case 2.

TRUSTEES.

Opinion taken by a person named a Trustee without his sanction.]—A person who has been named as a trustee of a term, in a deed of assignment thereof, without his sanction, and, on his refusal to assign the term to other trustees, is called upon to execute a deed of disclaimer, is justified in taking the opinion of counsel on his obligation to execute such deed, and will be allowed the costs of taking the opinion. In re Tryon, 7 Beav. 496.

Devise and bequest of Trust Property by surviving Trustee.]—Where a testator devises and bequeaths real and personal estate, on certain trusts, to be performed by the trustees named, and the survivors and survivor, and by the heirs and assigns, or the executors or administrators of the survivor, and the will contains no power to appoint new trustees, and the surviving trustee devises and bequeaths the trust estates and monies to certain persons, upon the trusts of the first will; this is a valid devise and bequest to them upon those trusts. For, although it would be a breach of trust in a trustee, even a sole surviving trustee, in the absence of a power for that purpose, to vest the trust property in any other person by a disposition inter vivos, because he cannot transfer that personal confidence which the testator placed in him; yet this is not the case with a disposition by will, because, at the death of the last surviving trustee, there must be a devolution or transmission of the property to some one or more persons not immediately or directly trusted by the author of the trust; the property must pass either to the hæres natus, or heir-at-law, or to the hæres factus, or devisee or legatee, of the surviving trustee; and there is more probability of inconvenience arising from its passing to the heir-at-law, if there is one, since the heir-at-law may be a married woman, an infant, a lunatic, a bankrupt, or out of the jurisdiction. And when the word "assigns" occurs, as in the above case, the validity of such a devise and bequest is the more clear, inasmuch as some rational and legal effect must, if practicable, be ascribed to that word; and as it cannot, consistently with the rules of the Court, be considered to mean "assignees by deed," it may be fairly deemed to mean "persons who may be made such by devise and bequest." Tutley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Beav. 436.

Responsibility for neglect of bankers in not investing money.—Where a trustee deposits trust monies with his bankers, with a direction to invest the same in Consols, but he makes no inquiry respecting it until some months afterwards, when the bankers become bankrupts; he is answerable for the loss occasioned by the omission of the bankers to invest it. Challen v. Shipham, 4 Hare, 555.

Not investing as directed.—Where trustees are directed to invest personal estate in government or real securities, but some of the cestui que trust and one of the trustees permit the trust funds to remain in the hands of the other trustees at interest, and he fails; the trustees are chargeable with the amount of the trust funds possessed by them, with interest, and not with what they might have received had they invested in the funds; because, inasmuch as they had an option to invest in either, it is impossible to ascertain the amount which they ought to have received, and they could not be charged with the specific loss resulting from an act (namely, an investment in the funds) not having been done, which they were not imperatively bound to do. Shepherd v. Moulis, 4 Hare, 500.

UNDERLEASE—See "Vendor and Purchaser," Case 10.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Part payment of Purchase-money.—Re-sale of goods by the Vendor.—Assignment by the Purchaser for the benefit of creditors.—Where a purchaser pays part of the purchase-money of goods, and allows them to remain in the vendor's possession, and the vendor assents to a deed of assignment executed by the purchaser for the benefit of his creditors who shall execute the deed, and afterwards re-sells the goods for a sum less than the balance due to him from the first purchaser, he cannot claim a dividend with the other creditors of the first purchaser upon the balance of the purchase-money; for, by assenting to the deed, the vendor ceased to have any property in the goods, which passed, under the deed, to the assignees, and he took instead a dividend under the trusts of the deed. Bush v. Shipman, 10 Jur. 507—L. C.

Sale of a share of a Patent.—When Time is of the essence of a Contract, as regards payment of the consideration.—Where a patentee agrees to give another person a share of the patent, in consideration as well of other sums to be previously paid at various times, as of a certain sum to be paid by a particular day, to be applied in taking out foreign patents, and the latter sum is not paid by that day, nor previously to the time for inrolling the specification; the patentee is entitled to rescind the contract, notwithstanding his acceptance of other sums at other times than those which were fixed by the agreement; for, time was of the essence of the contract in regard to the payment of the latter sum, because it is most important that the patentee should have the means of obtaining foreign patents before the specification is published to the world. Payne v. Bonner, 15 Law J. 227—V. C. E. and L. C.

Abandonment of the Contract by the Purchaser.—Where a purchase of an estate is to be completed by a certain day, and the contract provides, that, in case the vendor shall be unable to obtain the concurrence of all the requisite parties in the conveyance, each party may rescind the contract on notice in writing; and it appears, from the correspondence between the vendor and purchaser, that it was well understood that certain persons should be parties, and yet their concurrence is not procured by the vendor by the time appointed for the completion of the purchase, and a month after that time the purchaser gives notice of his abandonment of the contract, and the concurrence of the parties above mentioned is not procured till some months afterwards, the Court will not enforce a specific performance of the contract at the suit of the vendor. Benson v. Lamb, 15 Law J. 218—M. R.

Presumption of the existence of a probate or letters of administration.—Probate or letters of administration will not be presumed, in support of the title to a term, from a possession of sixty years, where it is not necessary to admit the existence of a probate or letters of administration, in order to account for that possession. Doe d. Woodhouse v. Powell, 15 Law J. 189—Q. B.

Sale by a hospital to a corporation.—Where the officers of a hospital are chosen from the members of a corporation, the two bodies are not sufficiently independent to be capable of contracting with each other for the sale of real estate by the former to the latter. Attorney-General v. The Mayor of Plymouth, 15 Law J. 109—M. R.

Sale of a term by an administrator out of possession.—A sale, by an administrator, of a term of which the intestate died possessed, but which, since his death, has been in the adverse possession of other persons for several years, and of which the administrator never had possession, is void, as well at common law as by the stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 9. Doe d. Williams v. Evans, 1 M., Gr., & Scott, 717.

Specific performance of agreement for sale of a property, part of which is liable to be destroyed.—Where a person contracts to sell a wharf, with a jetty, which is essential to the beneficial enjoyment of the wharf, but is liable to be removed at any time by the local authorities, and that circumstance is not mentioned by the vendor prior to the contract, a specific performance of the agreement will not be decreed. Peers v. Lambert, 7 Beav. 548.

Specific performance of an agreement for sale of a lease, where there will be a liability in respect of the neglect of the lessees.—Covenant—Indemnity—Compensation.—Where a leasee covenants to build some additional houses within a certain time, and well and sufficiently to repair the houses already built, and thereafter to be built, and all the premises thereby demised, so well and sufficiently repaired, to deliver up at the end of the term, but he does not build the additional houses; in such case, although the lessor, by accepting rent after the expiration of the time limited for building the houses, waives that part of the covenant by which the lessee agreed to build, yet the covenant to deliver up the houses extends to the additional houses, as well as to the houses built at the date of the deed; and, although the purchaser might relieve himself from the consequences of a breach of the covenant by assigning the term to a pauper for the last day of the term, yet the lease is bad, for he ought not to be compelled to adopt any such expedient; and the purchaser is not bound to accept the title with an indemnity; and the amount of the liability cannot be ascertained, so as to render it a fit subject for a compensation. Nouville v. Flight, 7 Beav. 521.

Agent setting off a Debt due from himself to the Purchaser against part of Purchase-money.—If a vendor employs an agent to receive the purchase-money, and the agent sets off a debt due from himself to the purchaser against a part of the purchase-money, and then represents to the vendor, that he, the agent, had received the full amount of the purchase-money, and the vendor signs a receipt for the same, and executes a conveyance, the purchaser will still be liable for the amount not actually paid to the agent, but retained in respect of the agent's debt. Young v. White, 7 Beav. 506.

Sale of a term, with the advantage of an improved rent reserved on an underlease made by the termor after a mortgage of the whole term.—If a termor for years, after mortgaging the whole term, and making default in payment of the mortgage debt at the time appointed, makes an underlease, and then agrees to sell the whole term, with the advantage of the improved rent reserved on the underlease, he can make a good title, if the mortgagee reconvey to him all his interest; for, the underlease, though originally by estoppel only, (the termor having parted with all his interest to the mortgagee), becomes a lease in interest by the reconveyance by the mortgagee. Webb v. Austin, 7 M. & Gr. 701.

VESTED INTEREST.

Limitation to the testator's right heirs of his own name.—Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487. This case was sent for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer: a statement of the point decided will be found in 10 Jur. 214.

Necessity of surviving a prior taker.—Where a testator gives the proceeds of his residuary property upon trust for such of the children of a person as may be living at the time of the decease of the tenant for life, and the issue of such of them as may be then dead, in equal shares, such issue respectively, however, only taking the share or shares which his, her, or their parent or parents would have taken, if living; and some of the children die leaving issue; and such issue also die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, such issue take a vested interest, transmissible to their representatives. Ligon v. Coward, 10 Jur. 486—V. C. E.

See "Contingent Interest," "Heir."

WAIVER.—See "Waste," Case 2.

WASTE.

Cutting down pollard willow-trees.—If a lessee for years cuts down pollard willow-trees, leaving the stools or butts, from which they will shoot afresh, it is not waste, where they are not timber by the custom of the country, and do not shelter or ornament the house, or protect the bank of a river, or are not intended as a permanent shade to beasts while depasturing. Phillips v. Smith, 14 Mee. & W. 589.

Equitable Waste by Tenant for Life.—Time fixed by the Statute of Limitations, not running till his death.

Waiver of compensation for Waste.—Where a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, pulls down a mansion, and cuts down the ornamental timber around it, and sells the materials and the timber, this is equitable waste, although the inheritance may have been improved in pecuniary value; and the remainderman may either file his bill in respect thereof at or soon after the time of the commission of such waste, or he may defer doing so until the death of the tenant for life; and the time fixed by the Statute of Limitations will not begin to run until the death of the tenant for life. And in case he files the bill then, the estate of the tenant for life is liable to account to the remainderman for all the profit received by means of such acts of waste, with interest at 4l. per cent. from the time of the decease of the tenant for life; although the remainderman may have made no specific claim in respect of the waste during the lifetime of the tenant for life, but stated, in the course of certain negotiations with the tenant for life, that he was not desirous of founding any specific claim, but he could not but think due consideration ought to be had to the circumstance of the commission of waste. Duke of Leeds v. Earl Amherst, 10 Jur. 509—V. C. E.

WILL.

Instrument partially testamentary.—An instrument may operate as a will, though it be only partially testamentary. So that, where a person, in the same instrument, appoints his mother to be his attorney for him, and in his name, and to his use, to demand and recover the possession or rent of a house, and to retain all proceeds for her own use, until his return to England; or, in the event of his death, he thereby assigns and delivers to her the sole claim to the property, to be held by her during her life, and disposed of by her at her death; the latter part of this is a valid will. Doe d. Cross v. Cross, 15 Law J. 217—Q. B.

Publication.—Where an attestation is made in this form, "We, the undersigned, attest to have seen the above testator sign the above will," it is sufficient evidence that the will was published; for it is an attestation that the witnesses saw the testator sign what they knew to be his will; and hence it must be presumed, that by some words or acts he made known to them that it was his will; and by what words or acts is immaterial. Bartholomew v. Harris, 15 Law J. 166—V. C. E.

MEDICAL REFEREES.

Marshall Hall, M.D., F.R.S. Alexander Anderson, Esq., F.R.C.S.

By the Act of Parliament obtained by the Company, it is expressly conditioned that the liability of the Shareholders under the Policies shall not be restricted by special contract, or otherwise.

INSURANCES AGAINST FIRE are undertaken on Property of every Description in the United Kingdom, the British Colonies, and in Foreign Countries.

LIFE INSURANCE.—Two Scales of Premiums, the one being MUCH LOWER THAN USUAL, securing the Amount of the Policy without any Addition; the other, lower than the participating Scales generally adopted by Companies offering uncertain Bonuses, and CARRYING GUARANTEED ADDITIONS on a Plan entirely new and peculiar to the Institution.

By this NEW PLAN the insured becomes entitled, after ten payments to a fixed Annual Bonus according to his age at the date of the insurance, and at the end of each period of ten years, every Policy, unless the amount be doubled, will be increased upon the system of the Equitable Society, by the addition for every year it has existed of a STRIPED BONUS.

Thus, a Policy of 1000*l.* on the life of a person aged 40 years will be subject to an Annual Premium of 32*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*, and at the end of 10 years it will represent 1101*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; of 20 years, 1505*l.*; of 30 years, 1616*l.*; and of 40 years, 2004*l.*; but should the death occur between two biennial periods, say at the expiration of 25 years, the sum payable under the Policy having been further increased by annual additions since the 20th year, will be 1555*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

A SUMMARY OF the LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 14, 1846.

It is curious to observe the exceptions which the progress of society has caused to be ingrafted on the common-law rule, "Actio personalis moritur cum persona." The principle of the common law was, that, if any injury were done either to the person or the property of another, for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction, the action died with the person to whom or by whom the wrong was done. Thus, where the action was founded on any malfeasance or misfeasance, was a tort, or arose ex delicto, such as trespass for taking goods, &c., trover, false imprisonment, assault and battery, slander, deceit, diverting a watercourse, obstructing lights, escape, and many other cases of the like kind, where the declaration imputes a tort done either to the person or the property of another, and the plea must be not guilty, the rule was "Actio personalis moritur cum persona." The first alteration in this rule was made by stat. 4 Edw. 3, c. 7, (De bonis asportatis in vita testatoris), which, reciting, that in time past executors have not had actions for a trespass done to their testators, as of the goods and chattels of the said testators carried away in their life, and so as such trespasses have remained unpunished, enacts, that the executors in such cases shall have an action against the trespassers, and recover their damages in like manner as they whose executors they be, should have had if they were living. The remedy above given was extended by the stat. 25 Edw. 3, c. 5, to executors of executors; and, by an equitable construction of the first statute, to administrators. This statute, indeed, being a remedial law, has always been expounded largely, and, though it makes use of the word "trespases" only, has been extended to other cases within its meaning and intent. By the construction put upon it, an executor or administrator might have the same actions for any injury done to the personal estate of the testator in his lifetime, whereby it became less beneficial to the executor, as the testator himself might have had, whatever the form of action might be, (Latch. 169): trespass or trover,—action for a false return,—for an escape,—debt on a judgment against an executor suggesting a devastavit,—action for removing goods taken in execution before the testator (the landlord) was paid a year's rent,—and other actions of the like kind, for injuries done to the personal estate of the testator in his lifetime. But neither in terms nor by construction did the statute of Edward III extend to injuries done to the person or to the freehold of the testator: therefore, an executor or administrator cannot have actions of assault and battery, false imprisonment, slander, deceit, nor, as the law stood under that statute, for diverting a watercourse obstructing lights, cutting trees, and other actions of the like kind.

The want of a remedy for injuries done to the freehold of the testator, led to the next statutory alteration of the common-law rule.

Amongst the various amendments of the law introduced by the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, the 2nd section enacted, that an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, might be maintained by the executors or administrators of any person deceased, for any injury to the real estate of such person, committed in his lifetime, for which an action might have been maintained by such person, so as such injury shall have been committed within six calendar months before the death of such deceased person; and provided such action shall be brought within one year after the death of such person; and the damages, when recovered, shall be part of the personal estate of such person. And further, that an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, might be maintained against the executors or administrators of any person deceased, for any wrong committed by in his lifetime to another, in respect of his property, real or personal, so as such injury shall have been committed within six calendar months before such person's death, and so as such action shall be brought within six calendar months after such executors or administrators shall have taken upon themselves the administration of the estate and effects of such person. But actions for injuries to the person remained subject to the common-law rule, "Actio personalis moritur cum persona." The executors of a deceased person could not bring an action for the most grievous injury to him; and the strictness of the rule led to the anomaly, that, if a person received an injury through the default or negligence of another, which stopped short of causing his death, he might bring an action and recover ample damages; but if the injury was so great as to produce death, all right of action was gone, and no damages could be recovered. This state of the law had been often complained of, but would probably have remained unaltered had not railway travelling furnished examples, too striking to be passed over, of its repugnance to common sense and justice. Accordingly, the Legislature has, in the last session, in conformity with the laws of most foreign countries, made a further encroachment on the common-law rule, in the "Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accidents." This act recites, that no action at law was maintainable against a person who, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default, may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrongdoer in such case should be answerable, in damages, for the injury so caused by him; and enacts, that, whensoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to a felony. Having thus resolved to destroy the principal relic of the common-law doctrine, it would have been well, we think, if the Legislature had simply directed that the damages recovered in the action should form part of the personal estate of the person injured, in the same manner as any other damages recovered by an executor. There seems no sound reason why the compensation for the death of a person should not be applied in the same manner and for the same objects as the fruits of his industry would have been if he had lived—why his creditors should not have the same claim upon the former as they would have had upon the latter,—or why the one should not be as much within his disposition by will as the other. But the Legislature appears to have been startled at the boldness of its infringement upon the common-law, and to have wished to call to its assistance the softer feelings of our nature. What it hesitated to grant to the claims of strict justice, it thought gracefully to yield to those of kindred and affection. It has, therefore, introduced an anomalous kind of action, by providing that it shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person whose death shall have been caused; that the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit the action shall be brought; and that the amount recovered shall be divided amongst those parties in such shares as the jury, by their verdict, shall find and direct. We presume, that, in estimating the damages, the jury will be expected to take into consideration the pecuniary injury the parties have received. Now, it may often happen, that the parties for whose benefit the action is allowed to be brought have sustained no pecuniary injury whatever—that has fallen upon others. Is the wrongdoer in such a case to have the benefit of it? Suppose, for instance,—what will, no doubt, be very common,—the death of a person whose life is insured. In a pecuniary point of view, this would be a benefit to the parties for whom the action might be brought, and, therefore, that element of the damages ought to be excluded. But the insurers, who really sustain that portion of the injury, cannot bring an action, or recover any damages.

Many similar cases might be put, in all of which the action allowed by this act will fail of doing justice to those who are really injured. It seems to us to afford but a very imperfect remedy for the defect hitherto existing in the law; and we venture to think that the simplest and boldest course would have been the best—to give to executors and administrators a right of action in such cases, and direct that the damages recovered should be considered part of the personal estate.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 21, 1846.

WE call the attention of our readers to a very important decision, (Re Pender, reported 10 Jur. 891), in reference to the taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

The principal question in the case was, whether, in order to bring a solicitor's bill within the act, for the purpose of referring it for taxation, the bill must have been signed; and this question turned upon the construction of the 37th section of the act, which, so far as relates to the matter in hand, is in the following words:—"That no attorney or solicitor shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month after such attorney or solicitor, or executor, administrator, or assignee of such attorney or solicitor, shall have delivered unto the party charged therewith, or sent by the post to, or left for him at his counting-house, office of business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements, and which bill shall either be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor, or be inclosed in or accompanied by a letter subscribed in like manner, referring to such bill; and, upon the application of the party chargeable by such bill within such month, it shall be lawful" &c.

In Re Pender, bills of costs were delivered by a solicitor to his client, which were neither signed by him, nor inclosed in a letter, signed, referring to the bill in the manner prescribed by the act. The client referred the bills for taxation; and it was contended by the solicitor, that the court could not, under the act, direct the bills to be taxed, on account of their not being signed, or inclosed in a letter signed, pursuant to the act. The question was, in effect, whether the act intended merely to impose upon an attorney, as a personal condition, to be fulfilled before he can sue for his bill, the signing it, or inclosing it in a letter signed; or whether it meant the condition to be annexed to the very existence of the bill as a bill. Were it not, firstly, for the proverbial hatred of taxation which pervades the class of solicitors no less than every other class of her Majesty's subjects; secondly, for the equally proverbial aptness of counsel to see, if necessary, and contend for every possible meaning of words except their natural and obvious one; and, thirdly, for the habitual impression, produced by the experience of at least the last fifteen years on the minds of lawyers, that an act of Parliament cannot have a clear meaning,—one would be astonished at the audacity of that astuteness, which could see in the 37th clause of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, any other meaning than that which the Master of the Rolls and the Lord Chancellor have declared belongs to it.

The act first declares, that an attorney or solicitor shall not sue for his fees till he has delivered or sent a bill of such fees, thereby giving to the instrument that he is to deliver, its character of a bill. Then the act goes on to direct, that such bill, that is, a bill unsigned, shall be signed or sent in a letter signed and referring to it: and then, thirdly, comes the power given to the party chargeable by such bill, to apply to the court for an order for its taxation. If the act had meant that a bill is not a bill until it is signed, it would have said so; but, on the contrary, it speaks of the instrument to be delivered, as a bill before it is signed; and, with regard to the signing, all that the act says is, that, before an attorney can sue upon his bill, it must be signed. Again, when the act speaks of "the application of the party chargeable by such bill," it does not refer to such bill for the first time, and therefore the reference does not of necessity apply exclusively to a bill accompanied by signature; the very words of the act which direct the signature, referring to the antecedent description of a bill, necessarily not a signed bill. There is nothing, therefore, from which to infer, even on grounds of the purest technicality, that the act, in authorising the client to apply for taxation of such bill, meant to refer to a bill signed. Again, although at first sight it might appear, as it seems to have been argued in Re Pender, that, when the act speaks of the party chargeable by such bill, it must be speaking of a bill signed, because, if the bill is not signed, the attorney cannot recover upon it, and therefore, in a sense, the client is not chargeable; yet a little consideration shews that this cannot be the meaning of the word "chargeable;" for the client is as chargeable on the bill before as after signature; the chargeability being, not the immediate susceptibility of being the subject of an action, but the inchoate liability to pay, whenever the formal proceedings necessary to authorise the attorney to sue, are taken by him.

We apprehend, that the signing of the bill under the statute under consideration, is to the chargeability of the client, what the stamping of a deed is, in general, to the chargeability of the parties affected by such deed. The liability of the party affected, depends, not upon the signing in the one case, more than it does upon the stamping in the other; each of these formalities being an ingredient necessary, not for the purpose of giving its legal effect to the instrument, but merely for the purpose of enabling the party claiming under it, to bring it before the court.

The argument, however, which cannot be got over, is that which is put so prominently by the Lord Chancellor: "I have also," said his Lordship, "to consider what would be the result of adopting the one or the other construction; and I have in vain endeavoured to see what benefit would arise to either party from its being necessary that the bill should be signed."

The result of the decision is, that the condition respecting the signing of an attorney's bill of costs, is a condition not affecting the nature of the bill, but merely imposed upon the attorney, so that he must comply with it before he can proceed to sue upon his bill; and that it does not affect the client, so that his right to taxation is quite independent of the question, whether the bill, if it has been delivered, is signed or not. The decision would, of course, be an authority, whether it seemed consistent with plain common sense or not. But it is always satisfactory when one finds that a decision, which is an authority, is, as we conceive this one to be, as far from technicality, and as near common sense as possible.

A case has very recently been decided by the Vice-Chancellor of England, (Hall v. Hugonin, reported in this day's JURIST), which seems to sweep away all the refinements that have been thought to surround the question of the possibility of getting at a married woman's reversionary interest in personalty, so as to dispose of it; and to place the doctrine on this broad basis,—that wherever any prior interests can be transferred to or for the benefit of the married woman, so as to give her in effect the whole estate, she may, with the assistance of the court, dispose of it.

The case of Hall v. Hugonin, stripped of the facts not bearing upon this point, was this: that A., a married woman, being entitled as next of kin to a Mrs. Edgar to a share of a trust-fund, consisting of money in the funds, in which Edgar, the husband, had a life estate; A. and his wife took an assignment of Edgar's life estate to the wife of A., to the intent that such life estate might be merged in the wife's reversion, and that the reversion might thereby be reduced into possession; the parties in this case following strictly the authority of Lachton v. Adams (5 Law Journ. 382) and Creed v. Perry (2 New Eq. Rep. 42; and see 10 Jur. 516).

The trustees refusing to transfer the fund to the husband of A., he filed a bill against them, to take the opinion of the court; and His Honor the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion, that, upon a petition by the husband to transfer, the wife consenting, the transfer would be ordered. His Honor thought that this was not a case to which the doctrine of merger applied; and put his decision on the ground, that the married woman, being entitled to the life interest and reversion, had such an interest as could be dealt with in equity as if she had the whole interest.

This case is peculiarly important, because, although the same judge has already decided two others of a similar nature in the same way, (Wilson v. Oldham, Lewin on Trusts, 296, and Creed v. Perry, cited supra), one of those cases (Wilson v. Oldham) was, it is believed, decided without any argument at all, (probably it was heard as a short cause); and in the other, although the point was called to the attention of the court, there was no argument, and it is believed that only one case was cited. (See the observations on Creed v. Perry, 10 Jur. 516). The principal case was, on the contrary, very fully argued, and by counsel of eminence, and the court delivered, as will be seen by the report, an elaborate judgment. It may be considered, therefore, as a solemn decision of the question so much contested of late in the Profession, and considered to be of so much difficulty so lately as 1844, that the Master of the Rolls refused to decide it upon petition. (Story v. Tovey, 7 Beav. 91). And, unless Hall v. Hugonin should be overruled, which, looking at the state of the authorities, is not now likely, the rule of the court may henceforth be considered to be, that wherever a married woman has a reversion in personalty, preceded by life interests in other persons, if those interests can be made over to the married woman, then, by apt proceedings in the Court of Chancery, she may dispose of the whole fund.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law-Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'Rules,' and contains in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the application de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 22nd, 1846.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 28, 1846.

THE late Mr. John William Smith, in his Selection of Leading Cases,—a book justly prized by the Profession,—has given a place to Cumber v. Wane. In that case, reported 1 Strange, 425, the defendant had pleaded, to a declaration in indebitatus assumpsit for 15*l.*, that he gave the plaintiff a promissory note for 5*l.* in satisfaction, and that the plaintiff received it in satisfaction; and it being objected, on error, that the plea was ill, it appearing that the note for 5*l.* could not be a satisfaction for 15*l.*, and that where one contract is to be pleaded in satisfaction of another, it ought to be a contract of a higher nature; the court, on consideration, so held: Pratt, L. C. J., by whom the judgment was delivered, saying, "As the plaintiff had a good cause of action, it can only be extinguished by a satisfaction he agrees to accept; and it is not his agreement alone that is sufficient; but it must appear to the court to be a reasonable satisfaction, or, at least, the contrary must not appear, as it does in this case. If 5*l.* be, as is admitted, no satisfaction for 15*l.*, why is a simple contract to pay 5*l.* a satisfaction for another simple contract of three times the value?" In his note to this case, the lamented editor observes, that the main point in it, that above stated, has frequently been affirmed since; and he refers to Fitch v. Sutton, (5 East, 230), where Lord Ellenborough said of it, "It was expressly determined in Cumber v. Wane, that acceptance of a security for a lesser sum cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of a similar security for a greater. And, though that case was said by me, in argument in Heathcote v. Crookshanks, (2 T. R. 24), to have been denied to be law, and, in confirmation of that, Mr. Justice Buller afterwards referred to a case, stated to be that of Hardcastle v. Howard, (H., 26 G. 3), yet I cannot find any case of that sort, and none has been now referred to: on the contrary, the authority of Cumber v. Wane is directly supported by Pinnel's case, (5 Rep. 117), which never appears to have been questioned." Other cases are also quoted in the same note, in which the doctrine has been affirmed. It has also been recognised as law in the various cases by which exceptions have been engrafted upon it:—for instance, Longridge v. Dorville, (5 B. & A. 117); Walters v. Smith, (2 B. & Ad. 889); and Wilkinson v. Byers, (1 Adol. & Ell. 106), as to the distinction between a liquidated debt and an unliquidated demand of pecuniary damages, in which latter case the acceptance of a smaller sum may be a satisfaction; and the class of cases as to composition with creditors, which were once supposed to fall within the doctrine laid down in it. The authority of Cumber v. Wane having been thus repeatedly recognised, and the case having been made the foundation of other doctrines, probably none but a court constituted as the present Court of Exchequer would have ventured to question it. It has, however, furnished another proof of the truth with which the judges of that court have been characterized by a late writer*. In the case of Sibree v. Tripp, (15 Mee. & W. 23), they have intimated that they do not consider Cumber v. Wane to be

* "The English Court of Exchequer, for example, has been for many years mostly guided by two or three judges of extraordinary mental vigour, acuteness, and learning. The moment a point is stated, it is turned, and twisted, and placed in all possible lights; the moment an authority is quoted, it is criticised, analysed, and compared; there is little or no respect for names or persons; and it is useless to shew that Lord Kenyon or Lord Ellenborough said or thought so and so, unless it can also be shewn that Lord Kenyon or Lord Ellenborough said or thought right. The judges in question have certainly done good service in purifying our jurisprudence from a great quantity of dross, but they have sadly scandalised the old school, and made it very difficult for any but a man of the lowest class of mind (and such men are rare) to predicate a judgment; in other words, to give a confident opinion to a client."—Edinburgh Review, Oct. 1846, p. 398.

law or a binding authority upon them. One of the questions which arose in this case was, whether a plea which averred the making and delivery by the defendant to the plaintiff of three negotiable promissory notes for 125*l.*, 125*l.*, and 50*l.*, and the plaintiff's acceptance of the same in satisfaction, and discharge of two debts of 500*l.* and 500*l.*, and damages and costs, was good. "If," said one of the judges, "the case of Cumber v. Wane were law, and a binding authority upon us, undoubtedly we could not come to a conclusion in favour of the defendant. That case was one of assumption for 15*l.*, to which the defendant pleaded that he gave the plaintiff a promissory note for 5*l.* in satisfaction, and that the plaintiff received it in satisfaction; and it was held on writ of error after judgment for the plaintiff, that the plea was ill. It does not appear from the report whether the note was payable presently, or whether it was negotiable or not. The facts are not sufficiently stated to make it a binding authority." And quoting the judgment delivered by Pratt, C.J., he proceeds—"From the latter part of the judgment I must, with every respect for the great authority of that learned judge, express my dissent. Undoubtedly, at that time it was not law; for in Pratt's case, (5 Rep. 117), it was laid down as clear matter of law, that in the case of a bond for 500*l.*, due on the 1st of January, if the obligee accepted 100*l.* in satisfaction the day before, he was at liberty to do so; and the court never inquired whether the satisfaction was reasonable: they left it to the agreement of the parties. However, it does not appear, in the case of Cumber v. Wane, that the promissory note was negotiable, and, therefore, that the plaintiff had any benefit from it. The marginal note of that case—"Giving a note for 5*l.* cannot be pleaded as a satisfaction for 15*l.*,"—was expressly denied to be law by Lord Ellenborough in argument, in the case of Heathcote v. Crookshanks; and Buller, J., referred to a case of Hardcastle v. Howard, in which it had been so denied to be law. But, whether the case of Cumber v. Wane has been overruled or not, it appears to me that it cannot be sustained as an authority that the acceptance of a negotiable security may not be a satisfaction of a claim to a larger amount." It is important to observe, that the decision in this case appears to be founded upon the promissory note being in the nature of a chattel. The giving the promissory note is said to be a satisfaction, by giving a different thing, not part of the sum itself, having different properties. It is of uncertain value,—it may be of equal, but that the court cannot enter into: it is sufficient that the parties have so agreed. And, therefore, it must not be supposed that the principle upon which the rule in Cumber v. Wane is professedly based, namely, that 5*l.* would be no satisfaction for 15*l.*, and would so appear to the court, is denied by the Court of Exchequer. On the contrary, there are passages in the judgment of that court, from which it appears that it was anxious to guard against such an inference. For instance, one of the judges says, "It is undoubtedly true, that payment of a portion of a liquidated demand in the same manner as the whole liquidated demand ought to be paid, is payment only in part, because it is not one bargain, but two; namely, payment in part, and an agreement without consideration to give up the residue.

The courts might very well have held the contrary, and have left the matter to the agreement of the parties; but undoubtedly the law is so settled. The fallacy in Cumber v. Wane appears to have been in looking upon the promissory note as creating merely a simple contract of the same nature as the simple contract created by the debt, and not adverting to the fact, that the former, though in the eye of the law but a simple contract, nevertheless possessed in its negotiability a property which might well make it a reasonable satisfaction for a larger sum. Therein lies the distinction between it and the giving a sum of money, though it must be confessed that it is a very fine one.

DISPOSITION OF A MARRIED WOMAN'S REVERSIONARY INTERESTS IN PERSONALTY.

(From a Correspondent.)

The least exceptionable part of the policy of courts of equity, with respect to married women's property, is certainly the rule by which their reversionary interests are protected. Their separate property in possession, whether made inalienable or not, too often procures for their husbands a credit which the event does not justify; but reversionary property, protected from alienation, can give no false appearance of responsibility, and is precisely that kind of interest which may be most appropriately and beneficially removed from the dominion of the owner and her husband. So long, then, as the preservation of a married woman's reversionary property is recognised as a fit object of equitable jurisdiction, there can be no reason for encouraging any relaxation of that protection, under particular circumstances, upon merely technical reasoning. In the recent case of Hall v. Hagonia, (reported and commented upon in the last Number of THE JURIST), the Vice-Chancellor of England has confirmed some authorities of no great weight, and has virtually repudiated the duty which the Court of Chancery had been supposed to have taken upon itself with regard to the reversionary interests of married women; and he has based his decision upon reasoning, which, with deference we submit, not only proceeds upon technical distinctions wholly foreign to the spirit of the doctrine, but is, in itself, technically unsound: The kindred branch of equity doctrine relating to separate estate remained long in as unsatisfactory a state as that which the case of Hall v. Hagonia has renewed the rule before us; and a decision overruling that case would not be made in the face of a more formidable array of authority than that which was demolished in Tillett v. Armstrong. We shall therefore presume to treat the question as still open, in the hope that it will be further agitated, and finally settled upon satisfactory grounds, both of reasoning and of policy.

It would fatigue the patience of our readers to enter again into an examination of the authorities on this subject. (See 9 Jur. 514; 10 Id. 183, 231, 243). The general rule is well known, and there is now at least no doubt as to the existence of authority for the supposed exception to it. What is the general rule? That the court will not direct, or even permit or recognise, any disposition of the reversionary interest of a married woman in personality while it remains reversionary. We add the words in Italics because they are relied on as countenancing the principle of Hall v. Hagonia. The rule is thus laid down by the Master of the Rolls in Burrow v. Jackson, (1 Russ. 1): "The wife's right is not divested by the marriage: the chose in action continues to belong to her unless the husband can and does reduce it into possession, and thereby makes it cease to be a chose in action. The husband has not, on the marriage, any immediate property in the chose in action; he has only the right to reduce it into possession, if it be in a state capable of being so reduced. Reduction into possession is a necessary and indispensable preliminary to the husband's having any right of property in himself, or to his being able to convey any right of property to another." (1 Russ. 66).

"The current of authorities shewing that the court will not receive the wife's consent to part with her reversionary property, bears strongly on the question. If the assignment of the husband passes the interest to the assignee, and destroys her legal right by survivorship, all that could remain to her would be an equity to have a settlement; and there can be no reason why she should not be permitted to extinguish, by her consent, that equity, as completely as if it were an equity attaching upon property in possession. The court, however, will not take her consent while the fund remains in reversion; and the reason which it has assigned for this refusal is, that it will not prejudice the future right which the wife may have by survivorship." (1 Russ. 28).

The judgment in Purden v. Jackson has always been considered to have settled the law on this subject upon its true grounds. It appears, then, that the protection of the reversionary choses in action of a married woman from the acts of her husband and herself, is merely a consequence of the general rule, both of law and of equity, that her choses in action remain in her until they are reduced into possession by her husband. A legal chose in action is reducible into possession when the trustee is bound to pay it. The husband may recover his wife's legal choses in action as soon as it is due, without her concurrence. He may recover her equitable choses in action, when it is due, without her concurrence, but subject to her right to insist on having a settlement out of it. If he can arrange with the trustee out of court, the wife, in order to enforce her right to a settlement, must move; if he is obliged to go to the court, the court will not interfere until the wife's settlement is provided for, or waived by her consent in court. This is the only case in which the wife's consent in court is taken, or can have any operation: the specific and only object of that ceremony is to waive her right to a settlement. A married woman can, by an appropriate assurance, deal with her interests in real property; she can deal with her separate property as if she were unmarried; she can waive her equity to a settlement out of her equitable choses in action; she can exercise a power expressly given to her; these are the only cases in which a married woman has any power to do, or consent to, any act affecting her property. Accordingly, in Purden v. Jackson, Honner v. Morton, (3 Russ. 65), and the other cases where the husband and wife joined in attempting to assign her reversionary choses in action, the court took no notice of the wife's part in the transaction, but treated it as the act of the husband alone.

So far there is no dispute as to the law. Let us see how it applies to the case of Hall v. Hugonin. There trustees were directed to pay the dividends of a sum of stock to M. G. Edgar and his assigns during his life, and after his decease to transfer one moiety of the fund to Mrs. Hall. M. G. Edgar having assigned his life interest to Mrs. Hall, the court held that the entire interest in the trust-fund became immediately reducible into possession by Mr. Hall, subject to his wife's equity to a settlement, which she waived in court. "It is not," said the Vice-Chancellor, "a question of merger, but whether a married woman has not, at the time of petitioning, both interests, as representing the life interest of some one else, and also her own interest in reversion."

If the entire interest was reducible into possession, the rest followed of course. But was the entire interest, even the life interest assigned by M. G. Edgar, reducible into possession? In the first place, merger is, as the Vice-Chancellor admits, out of the question. Merger is a technical consequence of certain legal incidents of tenure, and is wholly inapplicable to choses in action, or even to equitable interests in land. If land is limited at law to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and A. conveys his life estate to B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, the estate so conveyed is merged, and B.'s executors or assigns have no title after his death, though A. be living. But if an equitable interest in land or in personal property be so limited and dealt with, there is no merger, and no destruction of the first life interest. There is no such thing as the merger of one equitable interest in another. If trustees are directed to apply the income of a fund for the maintenance of A. until he attains the age of twenty-five, and on his attaining that age, and not before, to transfer the fund to him; A., as soon as he is of age, can compel a transfer of the fund. Why? Not because such a transfer would be in accordance with the terms of the trust, but because the trust gives him a vested interest in the fund and in its produce; and an adult man cannot be restrained from dealing as he likes with his vested interests. He obtains the fund at twenty-one, because he is then under no disability, and in defiance of the special terms of the trust. If a trustee is directed to pay the dividends of a fund to A. for life, and after his death to transfer the fund to B., and A. assigns his interest to B., the trustee may go on paying the dividends to B., or, at B.'s request, he may transfer the fund to him; but in the latter case he will not be obeying the terms of his trust, but he will be obeying the direction of a person on whom the trust and subsequent events have conferred the right of dominion over every part of the property. Where the cestui que trust is a married woman, the case is entirely different; the trustee must literally perform the terms of the trust, because the cestui que trust is incapable of authorising him to deviate from those terms in the minutest particular. If the trust were, to pay the dividends to Mrs. H. until she should attain the age of twenty-five, and then to transfer the fund to her, could it be contended that the court would allow the fund to be transferred before she attained that age? Would it not be tantamount to a restriction on alienation until twenty-five? Yet the whole interest would be in her. Would not the case be the same if the direction were to pay the dividends to the wife until the death of A., and then to transfer them to her? Would it not be even stronger if the trust were to pay the dividends to her during her husband's life, and after his death to transfer the fund to her? Again, if the dividends were given to the husband himself for life, and the fund to the wife after his death, would the husband's appointment to a trustee for his wife of that which would be his after the appointment quite as much as it was before, be allowed to affect her reversion, or the duty of the trustees? Can it make any difference, that the life interest is given to a stranger, who afterwards assigns it to the wife? Would not, in each of these cases, the trustee be justified in following the terms of the trust—paying the dividends only until the arrival of the time appointed for transferring the fund? Can there be an option in the trustee to choose between two courses so materially different in their consequences to his cestui que trust? If not, can the husband have such an option? That the wife can interfere is not pretended. When a trustee is directed to transfer a fund to a particular person at a certain period, the authority of that person alone can justify the transfer at a different period; and here she is not in a capacity to give any such authority.

If it is said, that, in the case of a prior life interest, the transfer of the fund is postponed merely for the sake of securing such life interest, and that the moment that obstacle is removed the fund may be transferred, how are those cases answered in which the tenant for life has removed the difficulty by concurring in the application, and yet the court has refused to sanction the transfer,—cases which the Vice-Chancellor expressly recognises: as in Seeman v. Duill and Richards v. Chambers, (10 Ves. 580), and Fraser v. Baillie, (1 Bro. C. C. 518), where the life interest was originally limited to the husband, and the application was for a transfer to him; and in Pickard v. Roberts, (3 Madd. 384), where the husband acquired the life interest by assignment, and applied for a transfer to himself; and Bos v. Bos, (2 Con. & Laws. 606; 1 Drury, 42), where the tenant for life was a stranger, and the application was for a transfer to him. In none of these cases was there any obstacle to the immediate transfer of the fund, save only the fact, that the time appointed for such transfer by the trust had not arrived.

Even if there were no force in the above observations, we are at a loss to see how the objection can be answered, that the wife is at liberty when she becomes discoverer to disavow the whole transaction, and disclaim the insidious gift which was made to her. Her consent in court, it is admitted, cannot bind her, except to waive that equity which is the creature of the court—her equity to a settlement.

There is another way of putting the objection to the decision in Hall v. Hugonin, which we conceive to be unanswerable. It is settled, that when a life interest in a chose in action not merely commensurate with the coverture belongs to a married woman, the husband has no power to dispose of it beyond the coverture. Being a mere periodical payment, it is not reducible into possession at all by anticipation; the husband, being under no disability, may dispose of it by anticipation to the extent of his interest, (i.e. during the coverture), but not beyond. (Fraser v. Baillie, 1 Bro. C. C. 518; Stiff v. Ezeritt, 1 My. & C. 41; Lee v. Young, 2 You. & C. C. C. 535*. See Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 You. & C. C. C. 715; Bos v. Bos, 1 Drury, 86; Scarborough v. Borman, 4 My. & C. 383). It is, indeed, self-evident, that a life interest, standing alone, cannot be reduced into possession. Even a life interest confined to the period of the coverture is not reducible into possession. The husband may assign it, or release it, or, by purchasing the reversion, entitle himself to a present transfer of the fund; but it is out of his power to reduce the life interest, per se, into possession.

Now, in Hall v. Hugonin, Mrs. Hall having become entitled to M. G. Edgar's life interest, which, it is admitted, did not merge, it was necessary that the trustees should retain the fund in order to preserve her contingent interest in the dividends during the remainder of the life of M. G. Edgar, in case Mr. Hall should die first; and if there was a necessity for keeping the fund in the hands of the trustees, it was not then reducible into possession. But, it is said, the life interest was united to the reversion. Surely, not united more intimately than the two parts of the life interest, which we have seen the courts have recognised as separable, were united.

On the whole, it is submitted that the decision in Hall v. Hugonin cannot be sustained without entirely overturning the settled rules of the court with respect to a married woman's choses in action.

If Hall v. Hugonin is sustainable, the reversionary equitable choses of married women may be got at without the interference of the court. For, the principle of that case is, that an assignment of the prior interest or interests to the feme renders the fund immediately transferable, and the trustees are not bound to regard the wife's equity, but may transfer to the husband, if she does not apply to the court to stop them. COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Nov. 25.—Lord Denman, C. J., with reference to the sittings in banc after term, said: The court will, on Monday the 30th, take the case in the Crown Paper which has been partly heard; and then go into the New Trial Paper, taking first the case of Bainbridge v. Bourne, which has been partly heard. On the other days, the court will proceed with the Special Paper, and on one of them will take the case of Reg. v. Arnold.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

MICHAELMAS TERM.—10 VICTORIA.—Nov. 25.

This Court will, at the Sittings already appointed to be held on Saturday, the 12th day of December next, proceed to give Judgment in all motions now standing for Judgment, and also in all causes now standing for Judgment in the New Trial Paper.

GRAY'S INN.

At a Pension held the 24th day of November, 1846,

The Masters of the Bench of Gray's Inn have resolved to establish a Lectureship of Real Property and Conveyancing Devises and Bequests; and have ordered, that the sum of 300*l.* per annum, for three years, be paid by the Society, by way of endowment, to such person as the Bench shall elect to deliver the Lectures, to begin from the day of his appointment.

The Benchers therefore invite gentlemen desirous to accept the Office of Lecturer to send in testimonials of their competency and fitness, addressed to the Treasurer, at the Steward's Office, in South-square, Gray's Inn, on or before the last day of Hilary Term next. The Benchers are desirous, that, in addition to the Lectures, some further means should be adopted to secure the attention, and to ascertain the proficiency of the Students.

The discussion of some appointed subjects, in which the Students should be invited to join, subject to proper regulations,—opportunities afforded to Students of stating and of obtaining from the Lecturer the solution of difficulties,—and examinations in the subjects of the previous Lectures and discussions, suggest themselves as means by the judicious application of which the end in view may be attained.

The Benchers express, however, no opinion as to the best course to be adopted; but they suggest these matters to explain distinctly their object in establishing this Lectureship, and more particularly to induce each Candidate to send in such a plan of the course of instruction he proposes to adopt as may enable the Benchers to form a judgment of its probable efficiency.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, tines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 25th, 1846.

LONDON, DECEMBER 5, 1846.

WE do not set ourselves up for reformers of every alleged abuse in the law or the procedure of courts; neither do we affect to consider ourselves as called upon to take up the defence of the law, whenever it is attacked, justly or unjustly. But when we find the public totally misapprehending the ground and nature of some particular mode of proceeding in the despatch of legal business, we desire, so far as we can through the pages of this Journal reach the public mind, to disabuse it of its error. We have lately seen some remarks in a public journal, purporting to emanate from one of that class of persons called "Chancery suitors," a class with whom the public is, in general, disposed to have a most violent sympathy. The complaint of the individual suitor, to whose lament we refer, is directed against the new practice of transferring causes from the list of one of the Vice-Chancellors which may happen to be overloaded, to that of another which happens to be underloaded; and the particular ground of the complaint is, singularly enough, the very opposite of that which has been generally made against it. The general, and, as we think, well-founded complaint against the practice of transferring causes, is, that it forces a suitor out of the court which he has been permitted to choose, and has chosen, and out of the hands of the counsel that he rightly or wrongly has exercised his undoubted right to confide in, and has chosen, into another court, where he may, at the maturity of a suit, find himself in the hands of a judge and of counsel, to whom its birth is a mystery, and its adolescence an unknown thing. But the complaint of our injured suitor is, that he is not transferred: he has got into the cause list of the Vice-Chancellor of England, whose list is very heavy; and recently he had hugged himself with the notion, that, as there was to be a transfer, the transfer would be made—and he thinks it ought to have been made—by taking a given number of causes from the top downwards. If that process had been adopted, he would have got into another list, where he believes his cause would have been earlier disposed of. But, alas! the Lord Chancellor has followed some mystic rule of selection, taking a cause here and a cause there, so that some at the bottom of the list are transferred from the Vice-Chancellor of England's paper to another Vice-Chancellor's, and some at the top and in the middle, remain where they were.

Now, this aggrieved suitor has totally misunderstood the principle on which causes are transferred: they are not transferred for the direct purpose of expediting the hearing of any particular set of causes, but for the general expediting of business, by keeping all the branches of the court employed. Only, therefore, indirectly is the practice calculated or intended to bring forward the hearing of particular causes.

But, adopting that as the general principle, the authorities on whom the arrangement of these matters depends, have not thought it right to break in upon private convenience, more than was necessary for effectuating the general purpose of not wasting the judicial strength of the court. Therefore, it has been made, as we believe, a rule, that, in selecting the causes to be transferred, regard has been had to certain circumstances, with a view to avoid, as far as possible, the mischiefs of a compulsory transfer. For instance, if briefs have been actually delivered in a cause, that cause is not transferred, although it might have been so, if its mere numerical position in the list had been considered. So, if both parties desire a cause to remain in the court in which it was originally set down, attention is paid, if possible, to that desire; and a selection is made upon these principles, not with a view to accelerate directly the relative period for the hearing of any cause, but with a view to distribute the causes among the several branches of the court, with as little damage to the conduct of causes as may be.

If causes were transferred simply with reference to their places on the list, as, for instance, the first dozen or so, it is manifest that no regard could be paid to any considerations of convenience. The result might, perhaps, be convenient to a very few suitors, viz. those whose causes are at the end of the transferred list, who might thus have their causes brought to a hearing earlier than would otherwise have happened. But to all those who stood at the upper end of the transferred list, as they would have stood already well for a speedy hearing without being transferred, they could gain little or nothing by the transfer in point of time, and would, or at any rate might, lose much in point of convenience and safety, and even incur great additional expense by having to instruct fresh counsel, probably without giving them sufficient time to master the cases thus suddenly brought before them.

That the whole system of transfer is clumsy, we do not deny; we have already before in these pages commented upon it, and suggested, as we now again suggest, that either the several branches of the court should be left to take their chance of business, according to the popularity that they can command, as is the case with the courts of common law; or else that causes should be set down in a regular order by the registrars, without any reference to the wishes of the parties, so as to divide the business compulsorily between the several branches of the court; but no transfer should ever take place, except by the consent of both parties. While, however, the present system does last, it is preposterous for any one, when he has selected his court, and come in at the end of a long list, of the length of which he is apprised, to complain of being wronged, not because the hearing of his cause is deferred, but because he is left in the list of his own selection.

THE INCIDENCE OF TAXES.—BURTHENS ON LAND.

In treating of the burthens on land, we do not mean to break our vow of political neutrality; on the contrary, our object is to deprive the discussion of its political rest, by shewing that no established tax can possibly constitute a burthen on the owners of land, or of any other species of property. It has often been urged, that moveable and immoveable property do not contribute to the public revenue in just rateable proportion. That there is an inequality is generally admitted; but whether land or personalty is favoured is warmly debated. Going into detail, one party complains of the heavy duties on the administration of personal property, and calls for the repeal of this, or the imposition of a similar tax on real property passing by devise or descent. The landowner, justly alarmed, retorts, that this inequality is more than compensated by the great excess of the duties on conveyances of land over those on the transfer of personalty; and both parties concur in demanding a revision of the stamp laws. It is because we think, though on very different grounds, that there is a pressing necessity for an amendment of the stamp laws, and some probability of its being attempted, that we beg the attention of our readers to the theory of the incidence of taxes, in order, if possible, to prevent the trying of so absurd an experiment as that of seeking to compensate in the reign of Victoria an injustice which, if it ever existed, was consummated in the 53rd of George III.

The operation of taxes in respect of their incidence may be stated in a few propositions, which are so simple and obvious that we should not be justified in bringing them forward and dwelling on them, if they had not been strangely overlooked in some recent discussions. But we may fairly assume that the subject, simple as it is, cannot be universally understood, when we find a committee of the House of Lords, selected (it is to be supposed with regard to their qualification for the task) to inquire and report on the very question before us, returning, as the result and quintessence of their investigations, such incoherencies as these:—

“It is evident that every compulsory charge levied upon the land, and which becomes payable out of its proceeds before any portion of them is available or applicable to the profits of the capital vested in it, must be held to affect that capital*.”

“Affect the profits of the capital,” we suppose is the meaning. But this will not happen while the land yields rent; for the rent, being the surplus produce of the land after all expenses and the ordinary profits of capital are deducted, must bear every peculiar charge upon the land or its produce; a fact of which the authors of the report appear to be dimly conscious,—for they go on to say: “If such charges are of a magnitude to reduce the value of the net produce of the land below the average profits of capital, such capital would, in accordance with general principles, be withdrawn from the cultivation of the soil to be diverted into some other channel.” Are we to infer, then, that the landowner ever allows the capitalist to reap more than the ordinary profits of capital? By no means; he is well aware, as the committee informs us, that “the cultivation of land will attract capital at a lower rate of interest than most other occupations;” and yet we are told, in the next paragraph, that “all charges levied upon the land, whether paid by owner or occupier, reduce the net profits of their joint capital invested in the cultivation of it!”

“The land-tax,” in the opinion of the committee, “is a burthen upon land, inasmuch as it must be deducted from the gross proceeds of the land before its net product can become available as profits of capital.” The beginning and end of this apparently contradictory sentence may, perhaps, be reconciled by reading “profits of capital” in the sense of “rent,”—a nice derangement of epitaphs,” by no means without a parallel in this extraordinary report.

The same process which proves land-tax to be a burthen might be thought to be equally applicable to the tithe rent; but the committee feel a lordly contempt for such economy of logic, and having inferred the land-tax to be a burthen because it must be deducted from the gross proceeds of the land before they are netted, concluded that the tithe-rent must be a burthen, because (as they strangely assert) it is to be paid whether there is any produce or not. “The committee are of opinion that the tithe commutation rent-charge operates as a burthen on the land which is subject to it, inasmuch as a certain amount, measured in produce, must be paid, whatever may be the nature of the cultivation, or the return made by it.”

Having treated the other burthens with the like felicity and cogency of logic, the committee proposes seven “remedies,”—the seventh being a repetition of certain experiments on the value of malted barley for fattening cattle.

* Report of the Select Committee on the Burdens affecting Real Property. (Dom. Proc., 18th May, 1846).

Among the infinite variety of shapes which taxation may assume, it will be sufficient for our purpose to consider a few of extensive application—taxes on rent, on land, on profits, on capital, on wages, on commodities.

To exclude ambiguity in the use of terms,—by “wages” we mean that share which the labourer obtains of the produce of his labour, remaining after the capital (including rent) expended in obtaining the product has been replaced. The residue is the profits of capital. It is unnecessary here to shew how this definition may be extended to include wages of what is called “unproductive labour.” The ratio in which the net product of labour and capital is divided between the labourer and the capitalist, or the ratio of wages to profits, varies inversely as the ratio between the quantity of labour in the market and the quantity of labour which the existing capital is capable of fully employing. But the actual ratio in the standard (but indeterminate) case of an exact adaptation of the quantity of labour to the quantity of capital, is obviously incapable of a priori or exact determination. It is the result of a variety of physical and moral inducements, acting in various ways. By “rent” we mean that part of the produce of land which remains, after replacing the capital expended in cultivation, and paying the wages of the labour and the profits of the capital employed.

A tax upon rent will be borne by the landowner. It will not affect the profits of capital, because the landowner has no control over such profits. A tax upon land may be either a tax upon rent, a tax proportionate to the value of the land, (which is the same thing), or a tax varying with the acreage. In the latter case, as well as in the former, the landowner will pay the tax, for it will operate by diminishing rent, which is the surplus left after payment of all expenses, (including taxes), wages, and profits of stock. An acreage tax will also throw out of cultivation all land which, if untaxed, would yield less rent than the amount of the tax; but the details of the operation of such a tax must depend on the mode in which it is levied, and other circumstances. By throwing out of cultivation the most inferior lands, it will diminish the production, and tend to increase the price of agricultural produce; but as the price of other kinds of produce will also rise, it is obvious that (independently of foreign competition) the landowner will lose on the whole. A tax upon the produce of land will also stop the cultivation of the poorest land.

Taxes upon capital and upon profits are the same thing. They fall on the fund to be divided between the capitalist and the labourer, and must affect both profits and wages.

A tax upon wages is obviously the same thing as a tax upon profits: neither tax will affect the consumer as such, because the means of production, and the application of capital and industry, will not be interfered with, and the relative values of commodities will remain the same.

A tax upon all commodities or products of industry, is the same as a tax upon profits or wages: it diminishes the fund to be divided between the capitalist and the labourer, and falls upon those parties.

Rent is not affected by any tax upon capital, profits, wages, or produce, because it is the excess of the produce of land over the gross result obtainable from the same capital and labour otherwise employed.

The taxes we have been considering do not (except in case of an acreage tax on land, or a tax upon the produce of land) interfere with the application of industry, as taxes of a more restricted incidence may do. Most partial taxes, independently of their operation in restraining particular applications of industry, or modes of expenditure, may be referred to one or other of the general classes we have been considering.

A tax upon the sale of land falls chiefly on the seller. He cannot sell in the investment market, except at the real value of the land, and must pay the tax out of that value. But this circumstance makes it the interest of the landowner not to sell; and a buyer in want of the land will not generally induce him to sell, except by offering to pay all or part of the tax, in addition to the value of the land. The tax, therefore, operates as a restraint on sales.

Taxes on voluntary gifts, and on successions, fall on the donee or successor; but, inasmuch as they impair the ability of the owner to give or leave his property, the owner may be said also to feel their pressure.

Whenever a tax falls on the consumer, it operates in the same manner as a tax on his wages or his capital; for it is only out of his wages or his capital that he could have purchased the commodity.

It appears, then, that, as land, capital, and labour constitute the entire wealth of a country, its revenue can only be raised from one or more of these sources. The question remains, how is the pressure of the tax felt after it has once been imposed and settled?

Consider, first, taxes upon land. Suppose an estate of fifty acres, producing 100*l.* clear income, to be worth 2000*l.* A perpetual tax of 2*l.* per annum is imposed on it, reducing its clear rental to 98*l.*, and its value to 1960*l.* This is at once a confiscation of 40*l.* for the service of the state. Thenceforth, the owner's income is so much smaller,—his estate is worth so much less. Its value to sell, to give, to leave, is permanently reduced. He sells, and the purchaser pays for a property worth only 1960*l.*:—he dies, and transmits an inheritance of that value. The purchaser or heir, to whom it was never worth more, does not feel the tax. The evil was consummated and exhausted at the moment when the tax was imposed, just as if, instead of taking a perpetual rent-charge of 2*l.*, the government had set apart and appropriated to its own use one out of the fifty acres of the land itself,—which is very nearly what has been done where the land-tax has been redeemed.

A., the owner of the property, now sells it to B., a fundowner, who has never felt the pressure of the tax at all. B. sells out, and A. purchases, stock worth 1960*l.* After this, further supplies are needed, and the Legislature, considering that the landowners are over-taxed, determines to give the fundowner a turn, and now levies 2*l.* per cent. upon stock. How does this equitable adjustment of burthens operate in the individual case we have put? Simply to take from A., in his new character of fundowner, about 39*l.*, making, with the 40*l.* which he formerly contributed as landowner, a total confiscation of 79*l.* B., the fundowner turned squire, escapes free on both occasions.

Past confiscations, like past blows, are felt by no one; and thus taxes upon land and upon existing capital do not constitute a permanent burthen. But taxes which include within their scope capital yet uncreated and wages yet unearned, carry a more enduring sting. The pressure of these taxes is felt from time to time, as the capital or wages on which they are imposed comes into existence, in the same way as if a new tax had been imposed, save only in the absence of the element of unexpectedness.

The moral to be drawn from the above investigation is sufficiently obvious. As all existing taxes on land and on existing capital are, no matter how unjustly imposed in the origin, not burthens on individuals or classes, but portions of the land and capital set apart for the public service, a remission of any of these taxes would be a wanton misapplication of public property for the benefit of particular classes. The land-tax, tithes, highway rates, income-tax on land and on existing stock in the funds, and in joint-stock companies, and other taxes of the like nature, can never, therefore, be remitted consistently with justice to the community. Commutation or modification, for the purpose of remedying any inconveniences incident to the collection of them in their present form, may be allowed, but not remission. On the other hand, no new tax of partial incidence should be imposed, whether as a remedy for past injustice, or on any other pretence.

In another paper we shall endeavour to ascertain how far the vexatious restrictions of the stamp laws may be relaxed, without detriment to the interests of the public, or of particular classes.

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Law of the New County Courts, compiled from the Stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and the Common Law applicable thereto. By JOSEPH MOSELEY, Esq., Barrister at Law. Part I.

[Stevens & Norton. London, 1845.]

This is the first part of a work which, if continued in the same style, will probably become a standard book with those whose practice shall lead them within the atmosphere of the new county courts. Mr. Moseley has not hastened to snatch at the new statute, and to bring out, almost with the publication of the act itself, one of those things called editions of an act, with notes critical and practical, but which are in general little more than a reprint of the act, with a few unlearned notes, merely twisting its phrases into some other phrases, not more intelligible than themselves, under pretence of explaining them. But he has set himself, in the spirit of an earnest writer, to expound the new statute, not only by a careful analysis of its enactments, but by collecting a great mass of common-law learning, bearing upon the jurisdiction of inferior courts in general, and upon the powers, duties, and liabilities of persons filling such judicial and official stations as are created by the new statute.

A work of this structure is a work of labour and thought, and deserves a very different measure of examination and consideration at the hands of the critic, from those meteoric productions of which we have before spoken. We shall therefore devote somewhat more of our space and criticism to Mr. Moseley's pages than we have done, or ever will do, to the ordinary class of editions, cum notis, of new statutes. Mr. Moseley's plan will be best understood by the explanation given of it in his Introduction, which we therefore transcribe:—

"By the 3rd section of the statute of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 95, which, it is scarcely necessary to remark, is the statute on which the new county courts will chiefly depend, and which will therefore be referred to in the following work as 'the statute,' it is declared, 'that every court holden under this act shall have all the jurisdiction and powers of the county court for the recovery of debts and demands as altered by the act.' The effect of this enactment would appear to be not only to give all the powers and jurisdiction of the old county court to the new county court, subject to the express or implied alteration by statute, but also all the law and practice attached to the use of such jurisdiction and practice, subject to the alteration by the statute. For the latter will pass as inseparable from the former, and it would be absurd to suppose that the Legislature intended to give the powers without the duties that are incumbent on the use of them. It will therefore follow, that the jurisdiction and the power, and the law and practice by which such jurisdiction and power were regulated, of the new county courts, is partly that which is contained in the statute and partly that which exists at common law, because the common law was peculiarly that of the old county court.

"In order, then, to obtain as scientific as well as 'practical a view as possible of a subject which is likely to become of so much interest and importance, and yet one which, from its very nature, is at present, and for some years likely to remain, in an unsettled and uncertain state, it is proposed, in the following treatise, under such titles as may be deemed the best guides to the subject-matter they contain, first, to set out in full all the statutory enactments; then to give such comments thereon as may be deemed advisable; and, lastly, to set out all the common law collateral to, or bearing upon, the matters treated of under those titles, hoping, by these means, to anticipate and solve, as far as possible, the doubts and difficulties which are sure to arise in a scheme so extensive as the present.'

According to Mr. Moseley, the new courts will be of a very nondescript character, and he suggests in limine a fertile cause of doubt as to their jurisdiction. After speaking of the power of the Crown to create courts, and of how that power is limited, and shewing, that, where courts are created accordant with the common law, all necessary authority will impliedly accrue to them, he proceeds thus:—"And no authority will arise but such as is absolutely necessary. For, as we have seen, though power of appointing officers for the execution of process is created by implication, no such power accrues to appoint an officer to execute a writ of inquiry to assess damages, for that might have been done by the court itself. (Maccalf v. Worsley, 1 Roll. Abr. 526). And it is doubtful whether any process will be implied by law, other than process of common law, or whether the common law would imply anything in aid and assistance of a court whose proceedings were not according to the course of common law. As, if a court of conscience, or equity, or of civil law were created by act of Parliament, and power of issuing process or other necessary powers were omitted, it seems doubtful whether such power would be raised by common law. And, at least, it seems improbable that the common law would raise other powers than those existing at common law. And as the proceedings in the new county courts, as before observed, are partly not in accordance with the common law, there may be doubt as to whether any powers necessary for the carrying on the business of the court, and not contained in the statute, would arise to them by implication of law. But, as these courts are declared to be courts of record, and their powers and jurisdiction are to be the same as those of the old county courts, except as altered, there would be less room for any difficulty on this point with respect to these courts than courts of conscience."

So that, if Mr. Moseley's doubt is well founded, and we think it is, the judges of the new courts will probably not proceed far, before finding that the act does not tell them what they are to do; and they cannot infer it from the common law.

We would wish particularly, also, to call to the following passage the attention of those gentlemen who may be ambitious of sitting in the new judicial seats, indulging themselves in the dream that they will have nothing to do but to study the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and to deal out pure moral justice, unencumbered by form, and untrammelled by rules of practice. If Mr. Moseley is right, they will carry with them to the judgment seat the whole of the law and practice of the old county courts, in which case we can only say they will fairly earn their salaries of 1200*l.* per annum. But let us hear Mr. Moseley on this point.

"It were difficult to give any legal definition of the new county courts, such as they appear to be from the above enactments. They are not, indeed, entitled to the name of county courts in its strict sense, for the fact of their being courts of record, and of some of their proceedings being so utterly at variance with the common law, as the trial by five jurymen, and, in 'some cases, by none at all, would disqualify them from such appellation. And yet, by the 3rd section, they are declared to be county courts, except as altered by the act. On the whole, however, the new county courts may be said to be inferior courts of record, the law and practice of which is regulated partly by common law and partly by statute. For, as it is declared that 'they are to have the powers and jurisdiction of the county court for the recovery of debts and demands as altered by this act,' it is presumed that they will be the same in those respects as the old county court, except as so altered. And, as they are to have all the power and jurisdiction of the old county courts, it would appear that they will also have all the law and practice by which such powers were regulated in the old county courts as incidental thereto, except so far as altered expressly or impliedly by the act; for it could never have been intended by the Legislature to give them the power and jurisdiction of the old county courts without the corresponding duties and obligations incumbent on the use of it. But as, by the 6th section, all former acts of Parliament, so far as the same affect the jurisdiction and practice of the courts established by the act, are repealed, there is some doubt whether all the law of the old county courts, so far as the same arose by statute and concerned the practice and jurisdiction of the same, is not repealed so far as the new county courts are concerned. But the statute concerning the oaths necessary to be taken by officers, and the statute concerning the sale of offices, all of which are so important in all courts, are, probably in neither case, statutes within the description of statutes affecting the jurisdiction or practice of the court, and will be as binding on the officers of the new county courts as upon the former ones.

'The importance of the 3rd section, which assimilates the new county courts to the old ones, is extreme, as it has the effect of letting in the whole common law, which was peculiarly that of the old county court, as applicable to the new county courts, subject to the express alterations of the act, and thereby has the effect of elucidating and filling up, as it were, those imperfections and oversights which must ever exist in so extensive a scheme as that contained in the present measure for local jurisdiction. And although the practice and framework of the new county courts bears but little resemblance to that of the old county courts at common law, yet, as all the general principles of common law are not merely applicable to common-law practice, but to most legal proceedings, they will be found more extensive in the application to the new courts than it would at first appear. And these express provisions of the statute are the more necessary, as there is some doubt whether the general principles of common law could be applied in aiding and assisting in the carrying out of jurisdictions, which, in some points of view, were diametrically opposed to it, like courts of conscience and courts of equity, to the former of which these new courts, in some points, and, indeed, entirely in matters below 40s., resemble."

Mr. Moseley proceeds to treat of the courts, shewing, in conjunction with the enactments of the statute, the common law, as to when and where courts may be held, &c. He then proceeds to treat largely of the officers of the court—of their appointment, of their oaths of office, of their interest in their office, of their duties, their fees, and their offences: and on all these subjects he pursues steadily his plan, of stating the effect of the new enactments, so far as they can be expounded before any cases have arisen upon them; and of collecting a great deal of common-law learning bearing upon the different subjects of disquisition. The first part stops here; and we must look forward to the publication of the remainder, for the discussion of that which will be more important to the practitioner, viz. the procedure of the new courts. On this part of the subject, we presume Mr. Moseley will not enter, until the judges shall, pursuant to the 78th section, have framed the general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the county courts. In the meantime, we recommend those who intend to practise, or in any way to connect themselves with the new courts, to procure the part of Mr. Moseley's work that we have here noticed, assuring them that they will find in it solid and practical information, such as they will find it useful to recollect in their county court practice.

Cases cited in the best Modern Treatises not elsewhere reported. The Third Edition. By R. TABRANT HARRISON, Esq., of the Middle Temple.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Notes.

Just published, in 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 36s. boards,

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analyses of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The Reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success this work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, uses, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupillage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 766.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success.

He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think that in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

LONDON, DECEMBER 12, 1846.

SOME recent discussions and events have called public attention in a forcible manner to a great defect in the jurisprudence of this country. We allude to the absence of any effective power in the Crown to do justice in certain circumstances, where injustice has been done in its name to the subject. Take, for instance, the case of a person accused of crime. Such a person is accused and tried at the suit of the Crown, representing the State. The crime, if he has committed one, is against the public; at any rate, the public, through its organ and representative the Crown, is the prosecutor; and the punishment is almost invariably dictated by a notion of atonement to the State, rather than of compensation to the particular individual who may have been the subject of the crime. The whole principle, in fact, of our criminal law is, that crime is an offence against the State, in which the offence against the individual is merged and lost. Accordingly, the Crown is armed with abundant powers for detecting and punishing crime, but it possesses no sufficient powers for doing justice to a subject against whom its corrective powers may have been erroneously carried into effect. If, for instance, a person has been accused of crime, prosecuted at the suit of the Crown, tried and convicted, and sentenced to the punishment awarded by the law, and such sentence has been carried into effect, and it turns out afterwards, as it does sometimes occur, that the whole affair—prosecution, conviction, and sentence—is founded in error, not of law but of fact, and that the convicted person never did commit the crime for which he is sentenced to punishment; what is his position? What are his rights, and what are the powers of the Crown with regard to him? His position is that of a total dependant upon the power vested in the Crown of shewing mercy. His rights, we mean his moral rights, are pretty clear. As he never was guilty, as he never ought to have been convicted, and was only convicted through the error of the State, his right is to be remitted back to the condition in which he was before the whole transaction. To give him a pardon, is, in fact, an insult and an absurdity. They are pardoned who have done wrong; and if a sentence is passed upon one who has done no wrong, he ought not to be pardoned, but the sentence ought to be reversed, wholly swept away, as if it had never existed. But this is not all: if, in addition to the injury done by the mere fact of the erroneous judgment, he has received also through it consequential injury, he is of right entitled to compensation for such injury. As between man and man, no one ever dreams of contesting the soundness of this doctrine, and the law recognises and acts upon it. If, for instance, through an erroneous estimate of my own rights I injure another, the law exacts from me, not only that I shall undo whatever I may have done against him, but that I shall make to him compensation for any consequential injury that he may have sustained. If this be a just rule, and no one denies its justice as between subjects or members of the same state, why should a different one prevail between a member of the State and the State itself? And what good purpose can be answered by the assertion of an impossible infallibility on behalf of the State and its representative the Crown? Such, however, is the state of things as between the subject and the Crown. The Crown has no power to atone for the error of those bodies to whom the execution of the laws is entrusted, if in their execution of them they improperly convict and sentence to imprisonment a subject, except by treating him as it would an actual criminal found deserving of mercy, viz. by pardoning him; and beyond that, in the way of compensation for consequential injury, it is not possessed of any powers whatever. It has no public funds at its disposal for repaying to him even actual expenses improperly forced upon him, still less for making to him any compensation in the nature of damages. Now this, we apprehend, is a grievous defect in the powers vested in the Crown, and one which could be easily remedied. Nor do we apprehend any great indisposition would be found in the public to place at the disposal of the Crown the means of affording compensation, where, in the exercise of its powers for the benefit of the State, it has, through its officers, committed injustice, if the public were once thoroughly imbued with the idea, that in such matters—that is, in the administration of the law—the Crown is at this day purely the representative of the State, and not in the slightest degree personally concerned. When the Crown prosecutes, it is the public that prosecutes for its own protection. If the public has caught and punished the wrong person, it has no more right to shield itself from making compensation, under the vague piece of mystification of the Crown's irresponsibility, than an individual would have if he had injured a fellow-subject; and the public, we are satisfied, would be heartily ashamed of so sheltering itself, if it once saw clearly, as is the fact, that the Crown and itself are, in the matter of enforcing the laws, one and the same thing. The Crown, then, should be invested with the power of reversing and wholly obliterating, at its own expense, (that is, at the public expense), a sentence proved to have been founded in error, and should not be driven to the subterfuge of saving by its mercy a subject, who, not having sinned, cannot properly be an object of mercy. And it should also have placed at its disposal sufficient means for awarding to a person unjustly subjected to loss, and suffering through the error of its officers, compensation, in the nature of damages at the hands of the public.

VOL. X.

A part of the system to which the above remarks apply is, the rule of practice, that, in litigation between the Crown and subjects, the Crown pays no costs,—a rule which is, at this day, as absurd as it is harsh. It is founded, like the incapacity to make compensation, partly on the legal fiction that the Crown can do no wrong, and partly on what was, in the olden time, a reality, viz. that while the Crown was, as representing the State, obliged continually to act as a litigant on behalf of the State, its revenues did not flow directly from the people, but were the property of the Crown itself; and were, in fact, scarcely ever sufficient for the maintenance of the authority, and the execution of the various duties, that the political constitution of the times cast upon the Sovereign. But those times and those political arrangements having long passed away, with them should pass away usages which might then be necessary, but are now no longer so. Where, for instance, at this day, the Crown, for the sake of the public revenue, proceeds at law or in equity for the determination of the liability of an individual to pay legacy-duty, the rule that the Crown pays no costs, is productive of great injustice, operating, in many instances, to compel submission merely because the certainty of losing some given amount of property, is better than the uncertainty of the loss that may be inflicted in the shape of costs that cannot be obtained from the plaintiff, even if the defendant is successful. If we recollect, that in all these cases the Crown is, in truth, but a name, and the litigant is really the public,—that public whose unbounded wealth is the wonder of all nations,—and that it is in all such cases a litigant for its own protection and its own advantage, shall we not say, that it is monstrous that this suitor of endless millions, should avail itself of an obsolete fiction, to drive its individual members into submission, by placing itself beyond the pale of that liability to pay costs, if suing unjustly, which is found so powerful a check upon the capidity of individual suitors?

OBSERVATIONS ON GIFTS IN WILLS, WITH WORDS IMPORTING THE PRESENT TENSE; AND ON THE DOCTRINE OF KEEPING MORTGAGE DEBTS ON FOOT, WITH REFERENCE TO COCKRAN v. COCKRAN, (14 Sim. 248), AND MEDLEY v. HORTON, (Id. 226).

Two cases are reported in the number recently published of Mr. Simons' Reports, which afford much scope for reflection upon the doctrine to be collected from the authorities bearing upon their subjects respectively. The cases to which we allude are, Medley v. Horton, (14 Sim. 226), on the question of priorities as between incumbrancers; and Cockran v. Cockran, (Id. 248), on the effect in a will, of words of gift, avouring of the present tense. We shall take the second case first.

In Cockran v. Cockran, the words of a will of personality were these: "I will that my wife shall receive the interest of all the property that I possess in the public funds, for her own use during her natural life." The testator at the date of his will had no property in the funds, except some Long Annuities, which remained in his name at his death; and the question was, whether the legatee was entitled to the income of other property that the testator had in the funds at his death.

The judgment is, according to the report, of extreme brevity. It runs thus:—Vice-Chancellor.—"It seems to me that the words 'all I possess' mean, 'all I now possess,' that is, at the date of the will."—Declare accordingly.

The authorities on this point are collected in Mr. Jarman's Treatise on Wills, Chap. 10. That learned writer commences by stating two propositions: firstly, that, in regard to wills made before 1838*, wherever a testator refers to an actually existing state of things, his language is referential to the date of the will, and not to his death, as this is then a prospective event; secondly, that verbs in the present tense have a similar effect in restricting a devise or bequest to the subjects or objects existing at the date of the will. But the learned writer goes on to say, that, in some of the cases, considerable reluctance appears to have been manifested to carry out this principle.

The cases cited by Mr. Jarman in reference to the second point are, Wilde v. Holtmeyer, (5 Ves. 816); Bridgman v. Dove, (2 Atk. 201); Ringrose v. Brunham, (2 Cox, 384), all of which support the contrary of the second general doctrine laid down by him; nor does he cite a single one which supports it. We propose to examine these cases and some others, and to endeavour to point out the distinction that must be referred to in order to find when the rule is that the will speaks from

In Wilde v. Holtzmeier, the will was penned by a foreigner, and was very informal. There was first a bequest of a particular sum of stock, in these words:—"And as for such worldly estate and effects which I shall be possessed of, or entitled unto, at the time of my decease, I give unto my son, Henrich Herman Holtzmeier, and Robert Charnley, their executors and administrators, the sum of 2100*l*. Consols, 3*l*. per Cent. Bank Annuities, upon trust." Numerous trusts were then declared; and after providing for various events relative to his son and daughters, came these words:—"And in case my three daughters and son shall all happen to die without issue, child or children, of his, her, or their body or bodies, him, her, or them respectively surviving, then, from and after the decease of the survivor of them, upon trust for, and I do hereby give and bequeath all the said trust funds, and all I am possessed of, unto and amongst all child of my brothers, deceased and living, and sister, and her children in Germany, all equally alike, as shall be then living, share and share alike. Also, I give and bequeath" &c. Then followed a specific bequest to his daughters, a specific bequest to his son, and other bequests. And at last came a general residuary bequest in these words:—"And in consideration, after my decease, when all my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses are paid and discharged, I give and bequeath all the rest and residue, both real and personal, viz. bonds," &c. There was also a codicil.

The question arose upon the words "all I am possessed of,"—whether they referred only to the 2100*l*., or to the general residue, subject to the specific bequests; and it was held, that, having regard to the various gifts in the will, particularly to the gift of the residue, distinct from the gift of all he was possessed of, and having regard also to the codicil, and the general rule, that a sense must be put upon all the words of a will if possible, the words "all I am possessed of" meant all he possessed of the particular fund before referred to. The judgment was professedly based on the peculiar language and the whole context of the will; and the court, upon the general question of construction, used these words: "I have no difficulty in saying, the legal construction of the words, standing by themselves, is—not exactly what they purport in language—all at the time of making the will; but, if not explained, they must have the effect of passing all the interest in personal estate which the testator might have at his death. And I admit, that if those words closed the will, they would have passed all the trust fund, and everything the testator might have at his death. That is the legal construction, whatever may be the literal one."

In Bridgman v. Dove, (3 Atk. 201), the question arose upon the words as to certain estates: "I make liable to all debts I have contracted since 1735." The court said, "In all clauses in respect to provisions for payment of debts, they relate to the time of the death of the testator, in order to make a more honest and faithful provision for payment of debts. If it had been all the debts that I owe, still it would be extended to the time of his death. The words here are, "which I have contracted;" have contracted must be construed "shall contract." In Ringrose v. Bramham, the gift was to "Joseph Ringrose's children, 50*l*., to every child that he hath by his wife Elizabeth;" and the Master of the Rolls said, "I think I may fairly construe the word 'hath,' so as to make it speak at the time the will takes effect, and let in children born between the making of the will and the death of the testator."

In the foregoing cases, it will be observed that the language was not such as to point at all at a specific bequest. There was nothing in either of them, in the words of the gift, inconsistent with including in it objects or subjects coming into existence after the date of the will. The words "all my debts that I owe, or that I have contracted," are as applicable to the state of things existing at the testator's death, as to that existing at the date of his will. So, if I give to all the children that A. hath, the words may, without any strain upon their meaning, include children at the death as well as at the date of the will. The rule does not, therefore, seem to depend upon whether the words used in themselves designate the present, (for in all the three cases above mentioned the words did particularly designate the present), but upon this question, to what present they are capable of being referred; whether they are necessarily confined to the present existing at the time when they are written, or whether they are capable of including subjects or objects afterwards coming into existence.

The cases in which it has been held, that words designating the present, confine the gift to objects or subjects existing at the date of the will, will all, we think, be found to fall under one of the following two classes. They are either cases in which the testamentary instrument itself necessarily speaks at the date of its execution, and not at the date of the testator's death, and in which, therefore, though there might be a prospective gift if apt words were used, there cannot be such a gift if words importing reference to the present are used, because there can be, with reference to the instrument, but one present, viz. the time of its execution:—or else they are cases in which the subject or object is so specifically designated, that the will cannot include an object coming under the same description at the date of the death, without necessarily excluding the one to which that description applied at the date of the will; a construction which would be absurd, because, though a man may intend to include the future under a description also applicable to the present, he cannot be supposed to use words designating the present, for the purpose of describing exclusively the future.

Of the first class are the cases upon devises of real estate before the Wills Act of 1838, such as Crossley v. Clare, (Amb. 397), cited by Mr. Jarman, (vol. 1, p. 278). Crossley v. Clare was a devise of lands to persons described as the descendants of A. "now living in and about Seven Oaks, or hereafter living anywhere else." And Sir Thomas Clarke, M. R., held, that descendants born after the date of the will, were excluded by the words "now living." Here the will, being of lands, could only speak at the date of its execution. If it had spoken of descendants generally, it might have included them, though coming into existence after its date, because it might, as well as a common conveyance, have carried estates to persons unborn. But when it used the word "now," that word could have no reference but to the time when the will spoke, and therefore could not possibly be referred to the testator's death.

Of the second class are such cases as Abney v. Miller, (2 Atk. 593), where a testator gave all his college leases which he then held; and, after making his will, surrendered those leases, and took others; and it was held that this was a revocation of the bequest. The court said, "Where a testator expresses himself in the present tense, it must relate to what is in being at the time of making the will, and can mean only the first lease and the term to come in it." Now here, if at the date of the testator's death he had continued to hold the same lease that he held at the date of his will, of course there could have been no dispute. But although the will, being of personality, was capable of speaking at his death, yet, the subject-matter falling at his death within the description of the leases that he then held, being distinct from and of necessity displacing the subject-matter that fell within that description at the date of the will, it was impossible to hold the will to apply to the leases of which he was actually possessed, without saying that the testator never could have meant it to apply to the leases of which he was possessed at the time of making his will. So, in the case put by Mr. Jarman, of a gift to my son John, the son John living at the date of the will were to die, living the testator, and the testator had at his death another son John, it would be impossible to hold that the second son John was to take the gift; because, of necessity, the inclusion of the one in the terms of the gift excludes the other. The will could not mean by "my son John" two sons John; and it would be too absurd to impute to the testator an intention not to describe the person who was his son John at the time when he made his will, and an intention to describe exclusively a person not existing, and who might never exist.

We conclude, that the authorities are not conflicting, but that there is much more to be considered in applying them than merely whether the words of a will of themselves import the present, or not. That question, it appears to us, must be considered in connexion with the nature of the will; as, whether it is a will of land, which formerly could only speak at the date of its execution; or a will, which, prima facie, speaks at the date of the testator's death: and also in connexion with the nature of the subject or object of gift, with reference to the question, whether that is so specific that it would be impossible to apply the description to the subject or object existing at the testator's death, without excluding the possibility of its having been intended to apply to the subject or object existing at the date of the will*.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, DECEMBER 19, 1846.

THERE are several cases in our reports relative to the admissibility in evidence of the declarations of persons in possession of land explanatory of the character of their possession, the principle of which is sometimes, as we have had occasion to observe, misapprehended, and their application supposed to be less extensive than it really is. Of these, the first in point of time is Peacock v. Watson, (4 Taunt. 16, 17), where it was laid down by Mansfield, C. J., that, as possession is prima facie evidence of seisin in fee-simple, the declaration of the possessor that he is tenant to another makes most strongly against his own interest, and, consequently, is admissible. Next, in Doe v. Pettitt, (5 B. & Ald. 223), it was held, that the declarations of a widow in possession of premises, that she held them for her life, and that after her death they would go to the heirs of her husband, were admissible evidence to negative the fact of her having had twenty years' adverse possession. The widow was dead; but that fact is not alluded to in the judgment, the evidence being treated as admissible to explain the nature of her possession. Further, in Carme v. Nicholl, (1 Bing. N. C. 430), it was held, that a witness might be asked as to expressions which had fallen from a deceased occupier of the premises in question, touching the party under whom he held them. And in Chambers v. Bernasconi, (1 C. & J. 457), Lord Lyndhurst says, "Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership, and a tenant's declaration is evidence as cutting down the fee." Now, in the first three of the above-quoted cases, the person whose declarations were offered in evidence was dead, which circumstance appears to have caused the misapprehension as to the ground of admitting them. Mr. Phillips, in his Book on Evidence, (vol. 1, p. 316), classes them amongst the exceptions to hearsay evidence afforded by declarations and entries by deceased persons; having previously (p. 205, note 1) intimated that the case of Doe v. Pettitt appeared to belong to that class. "On several cases," he says, "the declarations have been made by tenants, where they have stated that they paid rent to particular persons. In these cases, the declarations have been considered as made against interest, inasmuch as possession is prima facie evidence of a seisin in fee, and therefore the declaration of the possessor that he is tenant to another makes against his interest." Now, declarations of deceased persons are admissible where the persons are to be presumed conusant of the subject-matter of the declarations, and where the declarations apparently operate against their own interest. It is presumed that such declarations are entitled to credit, because the regard which men pay to their own interests may safely be considered as a sufficient guarantee against their prejudicing themselves by any erroneous statement; and the assumed tendency of the declarations precludes the possibility of any fraudulent one. (Phillips & Amos, 8th ed., p. 306; Greenleaf on Evid., sect. 148; Sussex Peerage case, 11 Cl. & Fin. 85). And being admitted simply on the ground of their being against the interest of the party making them, and not being receivable until after his death, it is immaterial whether or not they were made in the performance of a duty, in the course of business, or accompanying an act done. These circumstances are frequently, indeed, found in combination with the fact of the declaration or entry (which is but a written declaration) being against interest, but they are none of them essential to its admissibility on the latter ground; and instances exist of declarations of deceased persons being admitted simply on the ground of their being against the interest of the parties making them. The case in Higham v. Ridgway, (10 East, 109), the leading case on the subject, and in many others since decided upon its authority, but which we need not here particularly refer to. But there are declarations the admission of which does not properly constitute any exception to the rule which rejects hearsay evidence,—declarations which are admitted, not as hearsay evidence of the facts declared, but as being themselves original and independent facts*.

Now, a declaration, made by a person whilst in possession of land, explanatory of the nature of that possession, is to be admitted as being part of the fact of possession. If made after the possession has ceased, it may be admissible, if against the interest of the party making it at the time of doing so; as a declaration by a person who has quitted possession of land, that he owes another person rent for it, which would be evidence after his death of the fact of his having been a tenant. But, when made during the possession, it is in itself an original and independent fact, forming part of the compound fact of possession; and wherever the simple fact of possession may be proved, the declarations accompanying it, and which, with it, make up the entire possession, may be proved, not as hearsay, but as independent facts; and it may be thus illustrated:—Suppose a person entering upon land, declares at the time that he does so as tenant, it will not be denied that such a declaration is admissible, not as being against his interest, but as forming part of the act of entry, and giving to it its true character. A person may enter upon land for a variety of objects, and under a variety of titles, and we must therefore look to what he says at the time, to ascertain for what object, or under what title, he does so; but the remaining in possession of land is of the same nature. Why does he remain in possession, and under what claim of right? What he says upon this subject must be regarded not as being said against interest, but because the remaining in possession cannot have its true character ascribed to it without doing so†. And it is on this ground, we apprehend, and not as being made against interest, that declarations by persons in possession of land ought to be admitted. Indeed, it is so put in Doe v. Pender, above referred to. And if we are right in this, it follows that the declarations may be proved without calling the person who made them, though he be alive and capable of being produced. In the case of declarations against interest, the party making them must be dead. They are admitted principally upon the presumption of his knowledge of the fact declared, and as the best proof that can be had after his death. If alive and capable of being produced, he must be examined as to his knowledge of the facts declared. But the admissibility of declarations accompanying an act depends upon no such presumption. As the act which they accompany may be proved by those who witnessed it, without calling the person whose act it is, so the declarations may be proved by those who hear them. It does, indeed, generally happen, that the occupier, whose declarations are offered in evidence, is dead; otherwise it would not be necessary to resort to such evidence: but Doe v. Rickaby (5 Esp. 4) affords an instance of such evidence being admitted, though the person was alive, and might have been called as a witness.

We might enlarge upon this subject, were it consistent with the scope and design of a leading article; but we have, we trust, said enough to point the attention of our readers to it.

Reviews.

On the Principles of Criminal Law. [William Pickering, 1846.]

This, which is one of a series of brief treatises on various subjects, is a meritorious attempt towards the solution of a problem, the difficulty of which is constantly becoming more acknowledged. The true objects of punishment for offences against the laws of society, are now generally recognised; but what modes of punishment ought to be adopted are still matters of controversy. The author, after pointing out what is the practical working of the present system, proceeds to state in what respects he considers it might be amended to secure the two great objects of punishment—the prevention of crime, and, at the same time, the reformation of the criminal.

With respect to juvenile offenders especially, the punishment of whom, he truly says, is one of the most difficult problems of criminal legislation, he proposes, including in the class all offenders under sixteen years of age, “as a second degree of punishment, deportation from England to a colony, say Canada, where, in asylums properly constituted for that purpose, they might receive education, be taught trades, and, after a time of probation had elapsed, and by their labour they had contributed towards defraying the expense of their maintenance and teaching, might be allowed in that same colony to live free men, supported by their own exertions.”

We abstain from quoting the passages in which the referrible to this principle in all cases where the nature and quality of an act of ownership or deminion, or of the possession, is questioned, and requires explanation; and where the nature and quality of the possession are questioned, and the contemporary declaration of the party doing the act, or of the party in possession, serves to elucidate and explain the nature and quality of such an act or possession.” (Id. 352).

* The distinction is pointed out in the following passage from the chapter on hearsay evidence in Professor Greenleaf's excellent treatise, (sect. 100): “Before we proceed any further in the discussion of this branch of evidence, it will be proper to distinguish more clearly between hearsay evidence and that which is deemed original; for it does not follow, because the writing or words in question are those of a third person, not under oath, that therefore they are to be considered as hearsay. On the contrary, it happens in many cases that the very fact in controversy is, whether such things were written or spoken, and not whether they were true; and in other cases, such language or statements, whether written or spoken, may be the natural or inseparable concomitants of the principal fact in controversy. In such cases it is obvious that the writings or words are not within the meaning of hearsay, but are original and independent facts, admissible in proof of the issue.”

† “Where a declaration accompanies an act, it is frequently admissible as part of the act itself. Such declarations, it will be seen, are more frequently used as collateral or indirect evidence, from which some other fact is to be inferred, than as direct evidence of a fact; and as such will be afterwards considered. Suffice it to observe, for the present, that declarations are usually admissible where the fact which they accompany is material and admissible, and where the nature and quality of the act are also material; for, in such instances, a declaration accompanying the act may either be regarded as part of the act itself, or as the most proximate and satisfactory evidence for explaining and illustrating the fact.” (Starkie on Evidence, vol. 1, p. 34). “To this head also the admissibility of declarations by tenants has sometimes been referred, and it seems that such declarations are clearly author points out the advantages which this would have over a similar asylum in England, as we think the whole work deserves to be read, and its length is not such as to deter any one from doing so. Suffice it to say, that, in conjunction with a better system of classification of untried offenders, so as to prevent the juvenile from being corrupted by association with the adult, it offers many advantages over the present system, (Parkhurst included), and seems to tend more towards the attainment of the true objects of punishment. The following concluding passage of the work may be deservedly quoted, explaining, as it does, the sentiments and design of its author:—

"I have now reviewed all the offences of which our law takes cognisance. In many of the punishments alterations have been suggested, which are put forward in the belief that they will bear the two great tests which ought to be applied to all provisions of this nature, i. e. that while they would lead to the prevention of crime, they would at the same time reform the criminal.

"Hitherto, with very rare exceptions, no one has paid any attention to the general condition of offenders against the laws. Some great crime, perhaps, concentrates for a time a morbid interest upon the individual who has committed it; but this is the result of mere curiosity for the most part, which is soon exhausted, and no beneficial result ensues: the subject is, in itself, a distasteful one; no man likes to contemplate the degradation of his species, and the malefactor is, by general consent, put out of remembrance. It is only thus that the system of wholesale transportation, with all its moral evils, could have gone on so long without an attempt at any amendment: year after year thousands of wretches were removed from England to perpetrate the same or worse crimes elsewhere, and the public was satisfied. The Archbishop of Dublin at last laid open its horrors before the Lords, many of whom acknowledged that they were unaware till then of what had been the state of things, and to his efforts must be attributed the present improvement in the system. To a certain degree, therefore, he has been successful, but more—much more—remains to be done."

A Consideration of the Judgment of the Court of Exchequer, in Reynell v. Lewis and Wyld v. Hopkins, &c. By A BARRISTER of the Middle Temple.

[Sweet, 1846.]

Towards the settlement of the law affecting the liability of persons promoting schemes for companies, one rule is laid down in the cases above referred to, viz. that the mere relation of co-provisional committee-men does not constitute a partnership or quasi partnership between such persons; and that therefore, to make one of such persons liable for the contracts entered into by another with third persons, there must be something more—acts or circumstances which shew agency, exclusive of the relation of co-provisional committee-men.

It is observed upon this doctrine by the writer of the pamphlet now before us, that the omission, in the judgment in Reynell v. Lewis and Wyld v. Hopkins, of all reference to the Act for the Registration of Joint-stock Companies, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, is, to say the least, remarkable; and undoubtedly it is remarkable, that, in a judgment upon cases involving proceedings necessarily affected by that act, no notice of its provisions should have occurred.

"It is contended," (says the court, in Wyld v. Hopkins, see 10 Jur. p. 973), "(and that formed the chief part of Mr. Martin's argument and a part of that of others) that the relation of co-provisional committee-men constituted an association or a quasi co-partnership, in which one was agent for the other, for the purposes of all preliminary proceedings necessary to enable them to obtain an act: or that the fact of their being co-promoters of the scheme, coupled with the fact that no money was supplied for the expenses of it, was evidence to go to the jury, that each authorised the other to contract for those purposes, on his behalf and that of the other promoters—it was insisted that where there was no other evidence than the mere fact of the defendant having already agreed to be a provisional committee-man, there was a sufficient case, or at least a case for the consideration of the jury to prove an authority given by the defendant to every other committee-man to give the order, out of which the contract arose, by himself, or by the solicitor or secretary or an authority to such solicitor or secretary to give it on behalf of the committee.

"We think that no such consequence follows as matter of law from the mere fact of the defendant agreeing to be a provisional committee-man—such an agreement amounts to no more than a promise that he would act with other persons appointed or to be appointed for the purpose of carrying some particular scheme into effect: the term "committee" means an individual, or a body to which others have committed or delegated a particular duty, or who have taken on themselves to perform it in the expectation of their acts being confirmed by the body they profess to represent or act for—an agreement to be a committee-man is an agreement to become one of that body. The schemes may be various—to establish an hospital, or place of emigration, to which persons are to subscribe merely for charitable motives; or partly from these motives, partly from others; or a proprietary school, or literary institution, or assembly-room in which they are to be beneficially interested as shareholders—or to obtain an act for a bridge, drainage, railroad or canal: but whatever the objects may be it seems to us to make little or no difference in the position of the person agreeing to act as a committee-man, if the object of some most or all, is gain to themselves individually—the legal consequence is the same, as if the object of the parties were the most charitable and benevolent; though the result may be practically very different, in exciting an improper prejudice in the minds of a jury; when the evidence is laid before them for their consideration. Such an intended association constitutes no agreement to share in profit or loss—which is the characteristic of a partnership: it would be absurd to suppose that such a relation could be meant to be created by any of those who consented to act—could it be imagined that a person would agree to be a partner not only with those who were then named committee-men but any that should afterwards be named by themselves, or by the projector of the company, and could those who subsequently agreed to become members, suppose that those previously named could ever have so intended? The truth is the agreement to become a provisional committee-man means neither more nor less, than what the words express: viz. an agreement to act on the provisional committee, in carrying into effect the preliminary arrangements for petitioning Parliament for a bill and so to promote the scheme. If afterwards the provisional committee-man does act, he is responsible for his acts."

Whether this doctrine will be acquiesced in,—whether it is not inconsistent, if not with the natural relation between co-provisional committee-men, at any rate with that parliamentary relation which the language of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, establishes between them, we venture humbly to express a doubt; and that we are not singular in our doubt, appears by the publication of the pamphlet above referred to, in which the author suggests some reasons why the doctrine of Wyld v. Hopkins should not be thought conclusive. It can scarcely be disputed, that provisional committee-men are promoters of an undertaking within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The words of the act are: "The expression 'promoter or promoters of a company' to apply to every person acting, by whatever name, in the forming and establishing of a company at any period prior to the company obtaining a certificate of complete registration." The court, in Wyld v. Hopkins, distinguishes between a person merely agreeing to become a provisional committee-man, and acting as a committee-man. But, whatever may be the abstract correctness of that distinction, it is submitted that it does not affect the question, whether a person agreeing to become a committee-man, is or is not a promoter within the meaning of the act. For though the act uses the word "acting," the expression is not acting in committee or in any other particular way, but acting in the forming and establishing a company. Now, as agreeing to become a member of a provisional committee is an act of some sort, and as it seems to us impossible to say that the formation of a committee is not a step in the formation of the company, it follows, that he who agrees to be a member of a provisional committee, does act in forming and establishing a company, and is therefore a promoter of the company.

Next, let us see what is the effect of provisional registration with reference to what is thereby held out to the public. It seems to be assumed by the court, in Wyld v. Hopkins, that the effect of a person merely constituting himself a provisional committee-man, is different from that of his holding himself out as such in terms to the public. "But," says the court, in the passage immediately following the one already quoted, "There are other cases, in which the question does not assume so simple a form, and where there is evidence that the defendant has not only consented to be a provisional committee-man, but has authorised his name to be inserted in a prospectus, not generally, but a particular prospectus, in which, in some cases, certain persons are described as the acting committee; in others, solicitors are named, or engineers, or a secretary. If such a prospectus has been so publicly circulated, with the defendant's consent, that the jury would presume the plaintiff knew of it, or if the plaintiff has had it shewn to him, at or before the time of making the contract, and has in either case acted upon it, the question is, what inference ought a reasonable man to draw from the contents of that paper?"

The court, therefore, it would seem, considered, that on proof of the specific circulation of a specific prospectus, it might be left to the jury to presume, and that a jury might presume, that the plaintiff had notice of the facts appearing by such prospectus. Now, let us consider what is the effect, for the purpose of publication, of provisional registration, and its consequences.

The return to be made under the 4th clause of the act, before publication, by any prospectus or otherwise, of the intention to form a company, is of the names of the promoters, with their occupations, places of business, and residences; and after or before such publication of "the names of the members of the committee or other body acting in the formation of the company, together with a written consent on the part of every such member or promoter to become such; and also a written agreement, on the part of such member or promoter, entered into with some one or more persons as trustees for the said company, to take one or more shares in the proposed undertaking, which must be signed by the member or promoter whose agreement it purports to be." And, by the 18th clause, all these returns are open to public inspection. The effect of this is, we apprehend, both in point of law and in point of common sense, that all persons dealing with a provisional committee have notice of the constitution of that committee. No other object scarcely of the right of inspection can be conceived; and it seems strange to say, that persons forming members of a body who put their names in a return which they know is to be open for inspection, can do so with any other view, or can at any rate pretend that they do not view as a probable consequence, that their names will be looked to and relied upon by those who deal with the body of which they constitute individual parts. Documents inrolled, and which any person has a right to inspect on payment of a fee, are, we believe, considered as published in point of law; as, for instance, an invention described in a specification duly inrolled, is published, so as to avoid a patent afterwards taken for it; not because it is the subject of the patent to which the particular specification refers, (for it may happen that it is not included in the patent), but because any person may inspect the specification; and therefore the public has notice of its contents. We apprehend, then, that, by force of the provisional registration, the promoters of a company do hold out to the public, as much as if they circulated a specific prospectus, the facts contained in the return, that is, at least, that they are promoters. Next comes the question, whether, as promoters, they are intended by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 to be partners, or at least to be quasi partners, for the purpose of being jointly liable; for we fully subscribe to what is said by the court in Wyld v. Hopkins, that, "if the prospectus state merely the names of the provisional committee, and nothing more, and no right can be derived from the context, that circumstance does not alter the liability of the defendant. If not responsible as being one of that committee in fact, he cannot become so by the representation of the fact." But the question, not, as it would seem, adverted to by the court in this important judgment, is, whether, by the fact of being a provisional committee-man, viz. a promoter, a person is not, by force of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, (whatever he might be de hors that act), a partner with his co-provisional committee-men? And we shall refer to a clause of the statute, the language of which seems to us to be scarcely intelligible, unless the Legislature intended to treat the promoters of a company as partners, or, at least, as jointly liable. We do not lay much stress on the circumstance, that the promoters are generally spoken of in the plural—not every promoter severally, but the promoters jointly; though, perhaps, even that circumstance is not without its weight. But when we come to the 23rd clause of the act, which defines the powers and privileges of companies on provisional registration, we find it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the promoters, among other things, to open subscription lists, to allot shares, to receive deposits, to perform such other acts only as are necessary for constituting the company, or for obtaining letters-patent, or a charter, or an act of Parliament; and, with regard to railway undertakings, and the like, to enter into contracts for services in making surveys, and performing all other acts necessary for obtaining an act of incorporation, &c.

Now, is it intended by this section that each promoter shall be at liberty to do the several things mentioned on his own sole responsibility; or is it intended that the promoters, as a body, may do them? The former can hardly be the intention; for, to enable each promoter respectively to render himself liable, it would not have been necessary for the statute to have spoken at all. He might have done so in the absence of any enactment; and so might all the promoters together, if, on every occasion of doing any act, they all concurred in the act. The enactment of the 23rd section is therefore surplusage, unless it meant to give to the promoters as a body some other characters and some other powers than those of a set of individuals capable each separately of binding himself; and, unless it meant to give to them the character of persons jointly liable, and capable severally of binding the body, it was entirely unnecessary, and can be held to have meant nothing. We conclude, that, by the 23rd section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, it was intended that the promoters of a company should be capable of doing the acts specified as a body, after the manner of partners, and that therefore they are quasi partners, for the purpose at least of binding the body by the acts of any member of it, done consistently with the enactment. In aid of this construction may be pressed the first declaration of the section, that the promoters may assume the name of the intended company. It would be singular to enable several persons to call themselves a company,—that is, a partnership,—and yet, at the same time, to say, that they are not to have the qualities and liabilities of a partnership.

The writer whose pamphlet has suggested these inquiries, taking the same general views that we have here offered, urges further, in support of them, the intention of the statute, as it is to be collected from the expressed intentions of its framers, in reference to the report of the committee on joint-stock companies. In this argument we cannot agree with him. The intention of the statute must be collected from its own language; what the report of the committee on which it is founded may have said, or thought, or done, is quite inadmissible as evidence to expound the statute. This pamphlet contains, however, other arguments of some force, in favour of considering provisional committee-men as quasi partners, independently of the statute; and, referring our readers to a perusal of it for these and other arguments in opposition to the doctrine lately laid down by the Court of Exchequer, we shall, for the present, conclude our observations on the liabilities of provisional committee-men.

LONDON, DECEMBER 26, 1846.

By an extract from the Gazette of the 22nd of this month, printed in another part of THE JURIST, it will be seen that Her Majesty has issued a notice, pursuant to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, (the County Courts Act), of her intention to take into consideration the propriety of making orders for the purposes of the said act, and for putting the said act into execution in every county throughout England and Wales. The section of the act under which notices such as that just issued are to be given, is in the following words:—"Be it enacted, that any order in council, made for the purposes of this act, shall be published in the London Gazette, and notice of the intention of Her Majesty to take into consideration the propriety of making any such order shall be published in the London Gazette one calendar month at least before any such order can be made."

On this Mr. Moseley, in his Treatise on the Law of the New County Courts, (p. 5), makes the following observations:—"Among other forms prescribed by the statute to be observed in the formation of the new county courts, is that by the 8th section, by which a month's notice is to be given in the London Gazette before any order can be made, so that, if an order be made on any matter requiring an order, whereof such due notice has not been given, such order will be void, because the council had no authority to make the order. And as, by the words of the act, 'every order made in council for the purpose of the act shall be published in the London Gazette, and notice of the intention of Her Majesty to take into consideration the propriety of making any such order shall be published in the London Gazette one month at least before such order shall be made,' it would appear, not only that notice of taking into consideration the ordering the court to be held must be given, but also a notice of every material fact which is to take place respecting such holding of the court, requiring an order of the council. As of the dividing the county into districts, of declaring parts of one county within the jurisdiction of the county court of another, of where the court is to be held and for what district, for all these facts can only be done by order in council, (vide statute), and no order is to be made without notice. So that, it would appear, the notice in the Gazette must set out everything that will be necessary for the creation of the court and the jurisdiction respecting which it is made, and for which the order of the council is necessary, or otherwise the order will be bad, and all proceedings under it void. At least, this is what the statutory enactments would appear to amount to, though, of course, this at present can be but matter of opinion. But there is no reason why notice of everything for which an order in council is likely to be required may not be given in the first instance, for if not required they can do no harm, and time will be saved. And if any material point for which an order is required, as an alteration of the district, or of the place of holding the court, is omitted, there must, no doubt, be a month's notice before such order can be made."

If this be the true construction of the 8th section of the act, the notice issued on the 22nd of December would seem to be of very little use, as it specifies nothing in regard to the orders, or the object of the orders, and amounts to no more than a notice that during the ensuing month the Queen in Privy Council will sit and deliberate, not upon the propriety of any specific order, but upon the question, whether she shall or shall not make orders at all; and when that question shall have been solved, it will then become necessary to publish a fresh notice specifying the particular orders which it is intended to make, if Her Majesty shall think fit to make them, after considering them in Council. It would seem, however, from the language of the notice just issued, that that is not the construction which the crown officers have put upon the act; for they can hardly mean that the Privy Council shall be called together to consider whether it will be proper for the Crown to take the act into consideration, or not; and we apprehend they must mean, that, during the month following the date of this notice, Her Majesty will take into consideration the propriety of making some certain orders, and that she will, at the end of a month or later, make such orders forthwith, if she is then advised that they are proper to be made.

The language of the 8th section of the statute is certainly rather loose and ambiguous. It is not easy to see of what use it is at all, unless the notice in some way specifies the object and nature of the order that is to be taken into consideration. But, on the other hand, the section does not in terms require that the notice shall in any way describe the intended order; and it is further to be noticed, that, if that were the construction, no alteration could be made by the Privy Council in any order as set forth in the notice, without a further notice before Her Majesty could make the order; because if she made an order not in the terms described in the notice, it would not be the order of which notice had been given, and would not, therefore, be lawful; and after the terms of an order were finally settled, then to give notice of the Queen's intention to take it into consideration would be absurd, as there could be nothing left to consider. It is, however, extremely important, that, whatever is the true construction of the statute, the notice should strictly pursue it; for whether there be doubt or not about the meaning of the 8th clause, there can be none, that if a county court be constituted under an order not made pursuant to the act, everything done in such court will be coram non iudice, and utterly void.

At the court at Windsor, the 19th day of December, 1846; present, the Queen's most excellent Majesty in Council:—Whereas by an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intitled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of small Debts and Demands in England," it is, among other things, enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that the said act be put in force in such county or counties as to Her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, shall seem fit; and to divide the whole or part of any such county, including all counties of cities, and counties of towns, cities, boroughs, towns, ports, and places, liberties, and franchises therein contained, or thereunto adjoining, into districts; and to order that the county court shall be holden for the recovery of debts and demands under the said act in each of such districts; and to declare by what name and in what towns and places the county court shall be holden in each district; and if it shall appear to Her Majesty that any part of any county, liberty, city, borough, or district may conveniently be declared within the jurisdiction of the county court of an adjoining county, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to order that such part shall be taken to be within the jurisdiction of the county court holden for the purposes of the said act for such adjoining county in and for such district as Her Majesty shall order, in like manner as if it were part of such adjoining county.

And whereas by the said act it is also enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that any court, holden for the recovery of small debts or demands within the provisions of any act cited in either of the schedules annexed to the said act, and marked (A) and (B) respectively, shall be holden as a county court, and to assign a district to every such court either greater or less than the district in which the court, holden under the provisions of any such act, has jurisdiction, and to alter the place of holding any such court, or to order that any such court be abolished.

And whereas by the said act it is also enacted, that any order in council, made for the purposes of the said act, shall be published in the London Gazette, and notice of the intention of Her Majesty to take into consideration the propriety of making any such order shall be published in the London Gazette one calendar month at least before any such order shall be made; and whereas Her Majesty has been pleased this day to refer the consideration of the said act, and of the orders which it may be proper to make for the purposes thereof, to a committee of the Lords of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, and to direct that the said committee do report their opinion thereupon to her Majesty.

Notice is hereby given, that, after the expiration of one calendar month from the date of the publication of this notice in the London Gazette, Her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, will take into consideration the propriety of making orders for the purposes of the said act, and for putting the said act in execution in every county throughout England and Wales.

THE REAL PROPERTY STATUTES passed in the Reigns of Wil Ham IV. and Victoria; including Prescription, Limitation of Actions, Abolition of Fines, &c., and Judgments, &c. With copious Notes and Cases of Deeds. Fourth Edition, corrected and enlarged, with new Cases and Statutes. By LEONARD SHELFORD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BEEB, of the Eastern District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1897 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Beeb; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, JANUARY 2, 1847.

MUCH dissatisfaction is often expressed at the state of the law with respect to poor-law appeals. It is said, and truly, that the whole is now so involved in technicalities and niceties of special pleading, that rarely is the settlement of a pauper decided upon the merits, or, if so, not until after the contending parishes have incurred great and useless expenses about matters of form. For this, the Court of Queen's Bench is too often unjustly blamed. We are not going to deny that that court has, by the mode in which it has carried out the enactment of the New Poor Law Act respecting examinations, and the disposition it has for years shewn to scan, in the strictest manner, the proceedings of magistrates, fostered a somewhat mischievous habit of thought and practice upon these subjects; but we have long been inclined to think that the Bar is as much to blame as the court, for the lavish expenditure incurred by parishes in the removal of paupers. The objections that have been successfully taken to orders and examinations have created an appetite for further discoveries, and it has become the ambition of gentlemen practising at sessions not so much to protect the interests of their clients as to distinguish themselves by astuteness in finding flaws which no one ever before dreamed of. But as every objection, when discovered and established, is carefully and extensively reported, and is of course, except in cases of gross ignorance or carelessness, avoided for the future, it must happen that the objections to orders and examinations really sustainable will become every term more and more reduced in number, and ought finally not to appear before the courts at all. One might expect, that, like other forms of legal proceedings, poor-law orders and examinations would gradually assume a certain shape, and if ever departed from, the mistake would be at once acknowledged and corrected. But this does not seem to be the case. Term after term the Crown Paper in the Queen's Bench presents its usual list of poor-law cases, and forensic ingenuity is racked to find points which will bear the shadow of an argument. Forms which have been in use for more than a century, and have met with the approval of the ablest minds, are attacked with the energy of despair*, and it seems with many to be a matter of self-gratulation to discover a new point, no matter whether it be good or bad, capable of being sustained on argument, or certain to be summarily rejected. We may appear to speak harshly, but we appeal to the Bar generally whether we are not right. The reports will testify for us; for no one who has examined them can fail to perceive that in poor-law cases objections are raised of a nature frivolous beyond example in any other branch of the law. We will take the lately-issued number of the New Sessions Cases, (vol. 2, part 5), the examination of which has suggested to us to make the foregoing observations. In that number, five settlement cases are reported; but one of them, (Reg. v. Walbottle, 442), turning upon the construction of a pit-bond, does not come within the class we allude to.

In the first, then, of the four, (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Northorram, p. 437), there was but one objection taken, which failed, and the order of sessions was confirmed; Lord Denman, in the course of the argument, observing, that it was much to be regretted that the sessions should have reserved for the court a question which they were fully competent to decide for themselves. In the next, (Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Watford, p. 460), four objections were taken to the examinations, which were overruled at the sessions, but a case was granted. Upon coming to the Queen's Bench, the whole of the objections were again overruled. In the next,

* Reg. v. Recorder of King's Lynn, 2 New Sess. Cas. 334; 10 Jur. 640.

(Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Anderson, p. 479), three objections were taken to the grounds of appeal, and the sessions held the objections to be good, but permitted the appellants to prove the facts upon which they relied, and confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court, which, after hearing counsel in support of the objections, decided against them, without calling on the other side; the Chief Justice saying, "It is true that there have been many cases in which some very minute objections have been taken, but some of those in the present case are such as could hardly be discovered without a microscope; and though some of the distinctions in former cases may appear fine-drawn, I believe, if re-considered, all those decisions would be maintained."

In the remaining case, (Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Paul, Covent-garden, p. 508), four objections were taken to the order of removal, as to which, after hearing the counsel in support of them, the court said, "The three last objections are too trivial to require comment: the first requires some consideration, principally on account of the great authority of former cases." And after consideration, the first was also overruled; and, therefore, of the objections taken in these four cases, not one was ultimately sustained. Are we not justified, then, in the remarks we made at the commencement of this article? But the cases we have referred to give rise to another observation. They shew to our eyes conclusively the utter inefficiency of the courts of quarter sessions to deal with such matters. In the first, second, and fourth cases, where their orders were confirmed, they ought to have had sufficient confidence in their own judgment to refuse to reserve any question for the Queen's Bench; and in the third, they held objections to be good, which were manifestly frivolous. Before a competent tribunal, probably no counsel would have ventured to raise the objections; or if he had had the courage to do so, they would have been at once finally disposed of. We have before this urged the necessity of an alteration in these courts. It is now becoming universally acknowledged, and nothing but the powerful interest which is enlisted on their side could any longer preserve them.

A Letter to the Lord Chancellor on the Reform of the Law.
By JOHN GEORGE PHILLIMORE. [Ridgway.]

The gentleman who writes this pamphlet, designating himself as plain "John George Phillimore," without the appendage of the word "barrister at law," is, we believe, a barrister of some standing. Judging him from this production, by which only we know him, we should say that he is a man of much reading, of some eloquence, but of much violence; and these qualities he has manifested in his pamphlet, by abundance of quotations from Greek and Latin authors, and from the fathers of English literature; by a few passages which would sound very magnificent on the hustings; and by attacks upon the English system of common-law pleading, which savor more of the heat of an uninformed youth than of the calm censure of a wise and learned man. Ex gr.: "The facts," says Mr. Phillimore, "stated in the pages of 'special pleading, which are the disgrace of our courts, might be stated in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred in a quarter of a page of foolscap paper, always in a page. The judge, before whom the parties went in the first instance, should, if he thought the case required it, have power to grant a week's delay; for further delay, application should be made to the court above: where the facts were allowed, and the law disputed, the point should be stated as it now is, on the margin of a demurrer, and referred to the consideration of the court. This would put an end to the possibility of surprise, or of any technical objection.

"The parties might, if they chose, agree beforehand as to the points in dispute, and bring them ready drawn up for the judge's signature. In short, instead of a declaration which tells the defendant nothing, and a bill of particulars to which he looks for information,—a bill of particulars would be sufficient; and instead of a demurrer being drawn out on paper, and the points intended to be argued stated in the margin, to point the attention of the judges to the real issue of the case, the statement of the points would be enough, to the infinite relief of the suitor and the manifest benefit of substantial justice. It is very common for the judges to complain that the points intended to be argued are not specifically stated, but that they are left to collect them from the demurrer itself, at a considerable cost of time and trouble. Now, if it is not necessary, for the sake of the judges, that the demurrer should be formally drawn out, what purpose does the formal statement answer? to whom is it intended that it should give information? what object does it effect, that would not as completely be accomplished by the statement, to which the demurrer is, for all practical purposes, except oppression and expense,—a mere appendage? To be sure, if this system were adopted, nobody would be obliged to pay money he did not owe, or lose money due to him, because his pleader had put 'this he is ready to verify,' instead of 'this he prays may be inquired of by the country,' because no averment had been made of the matter not necessary to sustain the action, (as in Hayter v. Moat, 2 Mee. & W. 56, and Smith v. Cox, 11 Mee. & W. 45), and which, at the trial, it would have been impertinent to prove; or because, though a good cause of action was stated clearly, formally, and correctly, it was described as one kind of breach of duty instead of as another, (Harrison v. Matthews, 10 Mee. & W. 768); as a debt instead of a damage, (the claim being for money only); or because a plea was bad for duplicity, (Dietrichsen v. Gibbels, 14 Mee. & W. 845); or for any other mistake in the unspeakably absurd jargon, in which the lawyers of former days displayed their ignorance of jurisprudence, and the wantonness of their awkward ingenuity. But the professed purpose of special pleading would be attained, and this abundant source of iniquity and oppression would be choked up—a calamity which, as Lord Eldon is not alive to avert it, society sooner or later must prepare itself to undergo. Instead of two statements in trespass, one of which is almost always purposely misunderstood, and therefore leads to a new assignment, as it is called, the fruitful mother of numberless iniquities, one interview, in which the date of the charge or charges meant to be relied upon was distinctly given, would be sufficient. Let any one cast his eye over the reports, ancient or modern, and see whether, if such a system were to prevail, the most revolting folly and flagrant injustice would not be repeatedly avoided.

"In most cases—in all cases of ordinary contract—such an arrangement would be made without the least difficulty. Complicated cases would of course arise, and be much insisted upon by the bigotted enemies of all improvement; but these cases would not only be rare, but would, which is the great object of jurisprudence, be decided, after more or less examination, upon the merits, and it would be impossible for the mistake of a pleader to deprive a man of his unquestionable right. For this (iterumque iterumque monebo) is the grand question. In every instance in which a formal objection prevails, that has happened which, if it were always to happen, would destroy society. Wheresoever an objection that could only be taken on special demurrer, as it is called, prevails, reason has been shocked, justice violated, and a citizen deprived of his right as effectually as if he had claimed it before a judge bribed by his antagonist.

"It is in vain to attempt to extenuate such evils. Example, the great argument of civil life, demonstrates their enormity. Let us suppose a judge unfettered by any principle of law—a Roman Prætor for instance, in the early ages of the Commonwealth—would Verres himself have dared to inscribe on his tablet such rules of decision as those by which our reports are now disfigured?"

And again, "Was it not one main duty of the Roman Prætor to release the people from the intolerable burden of forms, unmeaning and obsolete? Would any judge—I will not say any of those who now preside in our courts of justice, and who, by their learning and probity, mitigate to so great a degree the frightful evils of the system,—but would any judge, so long as the faintest spark of equity or reason found refuge in his breast, decide a case, if it were in his power to decide it otherwise, as the cases I have cited are decided? or would he send away a plaintiff because his attorney brought his action on a promise to fulfil an award, instead of on the award itself; or condemn a defendant to pay an unjust demand, because, in his plea (not drawn by himself) two reasons are stated why his adversary's claim is unfounded, instead of one? If a judge, who could help it, was to decide in such a manner, would he not merit the contempt and execration of his species? Is there any anecdote of a corrupt judge transmitted to us—has Cicero preserved any decision of Verres himself—more ludicrously unjust in the eye of calm dispassionate reason than such judgments which, as I have shewn, the law, as it now stands, compels our judges to pronounce? Can anything be said or imagined worse of any judicial system than that, in a vast number of instances, the causes referred to the tribunals of the country are decided without any reference to their merits? Is it to give effect to such quibbles as these, that, as Mr. Hume tells us, all the vast apparatus of government is instituted? Is it to such a distribution of justice as this, that "kings, parliaments, fleets and armies, officers of the revenue, ambassadors, and privy councillors," are subordinate? To enable fraud and rapine to triumph in countless instances—to reason upon precedents established in the dark ages—to rock the grown man in the cradle of the child—to uphold such senseless fictions as the actions of trover and ejectment, the very names of which prove the barbarity of their inventors, are founded upon—to increase the advantages of the rich, and to exasperate the miseries of the poor? "Give me matter and motion," said Descartes, "and I will make a world." "Give me special pleading, said the Norman lawyer, 'and I will take care that the weak is, in a court of law, as well as out of it, the victim of the strong—I will take care that the rich man has at least a chance of getting anything he has a mind to ask for from the poor—I will take care that justice is no sure protection, and injustice no certain cause of defeat.' And can the deformity of such a state of things be exaggerated? Drawing lots—the inspection of a chicken's stomach—the flight of a bird—the neighing of a horse—nay, trial by battle—all these ways of decision, give justice at least an equal chance. The caprice of a king—the passion of a woman—the will of a priest—do not always preclude all possibility of obtaining it. Bridoye, in the fine satire of Rabelais, flings dice to know how he must decide; but with us the dice are loaded, in favour of chicane—fraud has an advantage."

Bearing in mind that the pamphlet is professedly an argument against special pleading, and that much may be allowed to the warmth that the mere fact of attacking will always generate in the attacking party, yet is not the language we have quoted a little too strong and inflated for the demerits of the unfortunate victim?—and would not its authorship, if it were printed without a name, be traced rather to the heated atmosphere of a general debating society, than to the calm and serene precincts of a grave, and, we believe, really able lawyer's chambers? That form may be too much worshipped, none deny. That form is still too much petted in special pleading, is not perhaps to be denied; but this sort of wholesale demand for sweeping away all form, and for deciding everything, as it is termed, upon the merits, is mere jargon, which, if listened to, would, in the words of our author himself, destroy society. We use the expression, "deciding on the merits, as it is termed," because in that expression, of deciding on the merits, is wrapped up the fallacy that pervades the whole of Mr. Phillimore's argument. He seems, in common with all other the enemies of forms of pleading, to suppose, that if parties were not tied down to any forms for expressing their legal demands, and their grounds of legal resistance to demands, that of necessity the merits must always come out; and to forget the enormous injustice that might be, and of course, therefore, would be committed, if parties were permitted to state their claims in one way, and try them in another. Let it be ever recollected that the principle upon which set forms of pleading are advocated and sustained is, that a party claiming a right shall tell his adversary what it is that he has to contest, so that the adversary may not, on coming into court, be surprised by finding that he has prepared himself to defend what was never going to be attacked, and has left unprotected the very point that is to be attacked. Where it is said, that a judgment on a question of form is wholly beside the merits, the assertion is only true in this respect, that it does not go to the general merits; but it does decide that particular merit on which the party has thought fit to proceed; and in almost all cases the form neglected to be observed is the symbol of some substantial merit, the absence of which, if the case were gone into upon the general merits, would cause the defeat of the party on the merits as effectually as its non-allegation will upon a preliminary objection to the pleadings, and the non-allegation of which, if it really exists, would tend to that surprise upon the adversary which it is the very essence and object of forms of pleading to prevent. Take, for instance, the simple case of an action brought for breach of a covenant, the breach consisting in not executing a deed, and no allegation that the deed was tendered for execution. It may be that the deed was not, in fact, properly tendered for execution, and the defendant might fail in his proof upon other points, and have proof upon that; but if his attention was not called to it by the plaintiff's pleadings, he might think the point so clear as not to be worth preparing himself with proof. If the forms of pleading did not put it in his power to force the plaintiff, by a preliminary objection, to say whether he intends to prove that point or not, great injustice might, whether by accident or whether by intentional surprise, be worked against the defendant. It would be puerile to multiply instances to shew that it is important, that when men go before a court as litigants, they should state definitely what are the legal rights that they claim; and it would be equally puerile to argue further to shew that the merits in issue are best got at, not by allowing litigants to diverge into endless gossip about their wrongs, as minor litigants do daily in police offices, but by compelling them to ascertain as accurately as may be what are their rights, or supposed rights, actually in issue, and to allege all they insist upon, and no more.

Mr. Phillimore, in his antipathy to special pleading, has fallen into a very common error, that of supposing that equity abhors forms. "Why," says he, (p. 32), "should any forms be requisite in common law more than in equity?" If Mr. Phillimore will take the trouble to refer to a book a little known, called Daniell's Practice, and to another, also a little known, called Mitford's Pleading, he will find in the former (vol. 1, sect. 5), forty pages on the "form of a bill in equity," and in vol. 2, 213 pages on demurrers and pleas; and in the latter work he will find, out of 332 pages, 200 devoted to demurrers and pleas. And if he will peruse those works, he will find, that in equity, although, from the fact that every suit extends to complete adjudication upon the whole subject-matter of litigation, pleadings may be more licentious than at common law, yet the same broad principle pervades equity pleadings which influence special pleading, viz. that the litigants must let each other know all that they respectively set up as rights; and, if they do not, may be turned round and defeated in the point of form.

While, however, we censure the exaggeration of Mr. Phillimore's Strictures on Pleading, we must not omit to say, that his observations may not be without good effect, because there is undoubtedly much in the existing state of the rules of pleading that may be amended; and while public attention would, perhaps, never be called to the evil by a moderate and philosophical attempt at pointing out details of error, it will be aroused by a daring and earnest onslaught such as Mr. Phillimore's. We must also do him the justice to say, that in some of his observations upon the insufficiency of the law itself to meet the wants, particularly of the poorer classes, he is calling attention to great and crying evils; as, for instance, when he points out that to the poor the law of divorce and separation is inaccessible. (P. 21, notis.)

Further, we will add, that Mr. Phillimore has some good observations on the evil which results from the conflict between the supposition that our judges merely pronounce the law, and the fact that they make it; and we shall conclude by extracting a passage on this subject, in which the author seems to manifest a sound and thoughtful spirit of reform, which we have no doubt is his proper characteristic, when not irritated by the shadow of special pleading.

"The next point," he says, "is judicial legislation. Although much has been written on this subject, I think the argument may be contracted within a very narrow compass. No lawyer can deny that the judges possess, and exercise perpetually the power of making law; that in a vast number of cases which come before them, they may decide either way without injury to their reputation; that their decisions are not only law, but are then always and essentially what law ought rarely (and, perhaps, even in civil matters, not once a century) to be—retrospective. For instance, at one time it was held by the courts, that no person ought to become a proprietor of bills of exchange, under circumstances which would excite the suspicion of a prudent man; and that if it did so, it flung upon him the burden of a most difficult justification; this continued to be the law for several years; all at once this doctrine was overthrown, not by an act of Parliament, the operation of which would only have been prospective, but by a decision, the effect of which, of course, was retrospective, as it proclaimed what the law had always been, and therefore changed the character of all contracts made within six years before that decision. Therefore, a person, who, on a point affecting more or less every member of the mercantile community, had acted on the faith of the former law, would have found, perhaps to his ruin, that he was mistaken. I put this case among thousands, because it is one which spreads its influence over so wide a surface, and therefore illustrates in so plain a manner the evils of the system. So, in the very last volume of Exchequer Reports, the case of Frith v. Rootherham, (15 Mee. & W. 45), was decided direct against the authority of a former case, Dickson v. Cass, (1 B. & Adol. 343), which last was decided by 'Lord Tenterden, Mr. Justice James Parke, Mr. Justice Taunton, Mr. Justice Littledale, and Mr. Justice Bayley; in short, by lawyers as able as ever adorned the bench of justice in this country. A judgment pronounced on this last occasion contains as strong an argument in favour of a code as ever was published by Romilly or Bentham. 'Let us look,' said Baron Parke, 'to the course of decisions, since Dickson v. Cass.' (But what is a man to do who cannot look to the course of decisions? and who, if he could turn to a code, might find something to guide him instead of being told to hunt through thirty or forty volumes of 'miscellaneous matter'.")

LONDON, JANUARY 9, 1847.

THE recent seizure at Gravesend of The Glenelg and of two war steam-vessels, and the proceedings which have been taken against the principal parties connected with their equipment, on the ground of their having contravened the Foreign Enlistment Act, (59 Geo. 3, c. 69), render this a fitting opportunity for some remarks upon the subject. This is, we believe, the first instance in which the provisions of the statute have been put into operation, and it involves questions of considerable importance in reference to the relations between this and foreign governments.

The facts of the case are, we believe, these. In the month of November last the government received intelligence that several vessels had been purchased, and that a number of persons had been enrolled in the service of General Flores, for the purpose of making an hostile expedition to the Ecuador. Measures were immediately adopted to stop the intended voyage; the ships were seized as forfeitures to the Crown by officers of the Customs; and prosecutions are now pending against several parties, who are charged with having acted in the matter. We shall, of course, in referring to a case still sub judice, avoid remarks applicable to the particular facts, and confine ourselves to a mere general statement of the law upon this subject.

It is one of the essential prerogatives of the ruling power of any state, that it should possess a control over its own subjects in relation to their dealings with foreign governments. Were it not so, innumerable questions would arise, dangerous to the peace and welfare of kingdoms. The private rights of an individual member of society and the public rights of a state,—the combined form of the members of society,—are clearly distinct in their character, and should be preserved each in their integrity.

The preservation of peace and the due separation of power form undoubtedly the grounds on which the state exercises its interference in this respect; but obvious arguments occur in addition for the assertion of this right. It frustrates many of the schemes by which the unwary and ignorant would be induced to leave their country under false representations as to the advantages which would await them on their arrival in a foreign land. Many who embarked as emigrants, expecting to derive benefits from their peaceful labour, would, probably, on their debarkation, be summoned to engage in military operations.

Although several statutes have been passed to prevent enlistment in foreign service without the consent of the Sovereign, yet the offence is one, as we might have anticipated, not unknown to our common law.

Either to enter into such service without such consent, or to contract any engagement inconsistent with the allegiance due to our own Sovereign, is a high misdemeanour at the common law. (1 East, P. C., c. 2, s. 23; 3 Inst. 144; 4 Bl. Comm. 122). It is a contempt of the monarch's prerogative for a subject to prefer the interests of a foreign potentate, or to do or receive anything that may create an undue influence in favour of such extrinsic power. This rule has been carried so far, that a subject, without the royal permission, is not allowed even to receive a pension from another state. Thus, we find, in the third Institute, (p. 144), "It is not lawful for any subject of the King of England to take a pension of any foreign king, prince, or state, (without the king's license), albeit they be in league with the King of England, both for that they may become enemies, and for that also it is mischievous and dangerous to the king himself."

By 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, s. 18, it was enacted, "That every subject of this realm that shall goe out of this realm to serve any foreign prince, shall be liable to be seized by the King's officers."

the seas, and shall voluntarily serve any such foreign prince, not having before his going taken the oath of obedience, shall be a felon." Upon the construction of this act, it was considered, that, if a party went out of the realm with intent to serve a foreign state, though he did not serve in fact, or if a party actually so served, though he did not go over for that purpose, he was within the statute. (3 Inst. 80; 1 East, P. C., c. 2, s. 23). The principal act, however, now in force, and under the provisions of which the proceedings now pending have been taken, is the 59 Geo. 3, c. 69.

By that statute, after reciting that the enlistment or engagement of His Majesty's subjects to serve in war in foreign service, without His Majesty's license, and the fitting out of vessels without such license, for warlike operations against the dominions of any foreign prince, may be prejudicial to, and tend to endanger the peace and welfare of the kingdom, it is in substance enacted, that if any natural-born subject, without the leave of His Majesty under the sign-manual, or signified by order in council, or by proclamation, shall accept or agree to accept any military commission, or shall enlist or agree to enlist as a soldier, or to serve in any warlike operation in the service of or for any foreign prince or state, or of any person exercising, or assuming to exercise, the powers of government over any foreign country, or to serve as a sailor or marine, or to be employed on board any vessel of war, or any vessel used, fitted out, equipped, or intended to be used for any warlike purpose in the service of any foreign power, or of any person exercising, or assuming to exercise, the powers of government over any foreign country or people; or if any such natural-born subject shall, without such leave, engage to go, or shall go, to any foreign state, with intent to enlist or serve in any warlike or military operations whatever in the service aforesaid, although no enlisting-money may have been actually paid or received in either of the aforesaid cases; or if any person whatever, within any part of His Majesty's dominions, shall hire or procure (or attempt to do so) any person to enlist in any such service, whether any enlisting-money be given or not, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of them.

By the 4th section, these offences, if committed in England, are to be tried in the Court of King's Bench.

By the 5th section, vessels, with persons on board engaged in foreign service, may be detained by any of the principal officers of the customs, upon information on oath given before them.

By the 6th section, masters or other persons having the command of the vessel, knowingly taking on board persons enlisted contrary to the act, shall forfeit 50*l.* for every person so received on board; and every such ship may be seized and detained by the collector or other officer of the customs until such penalty be paid, or bail given.

By the 7th section, any person, without the leave of the king as aforesaid, equipping, fitting out, or arming any vessel with intent that it shall be employed on foreign service as aforesaid, or to commit hostilities against any prince or state with whom his Majesty shall not then be at war; or any person issuing a commission for any vessel to be so employed, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour; and every such vessel, together with all the stores, tackle, and furniture, shall be forfeited, and it may be prosecuted and condemned as in other cases of the forfeiture of vessels to the Crown.

By the 8th section, every person who shall, without license as aforesaid, increase or augment the warlike force of any ship of war or other armed vessel which is in foreign service as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour. Provision is then made in subsequent sections for the trial in Westminster of any of these offences committed out of the kingdom, and for excluding the operation of the act from all persons who enter into military service in Asia, with leave from the Governor-General in Council.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.
